THE KAISER'S TROOPS CONTINUE VIOLENT BLOWS AT ALLIES

GERMANS REPORTED TO BE RETREATING

Bombardment of Germans by British Warships Caused Heavy Loss

Berlin Reports That Kaiser's Troops Have Repulsed the Attacks of the Allies and That the German Army Continue to Make Slow But Sure Progress in Belgium—Northern French Canal System Captured by the Germans—List of German Casualties Given Out by the War Department.

Terrific fighting attends the vain efforts of the kaiser's forces to turn the extreme left of the allies in northern France and Belgium. British warships are firing upon the Germans along the channel coast, and are reported to be shelling Ostend, recently taken by the invaders.

The official statement issued in Paris last night says that the allies are holding their positions from the North Sea at Nieuport in an irregular line to La Bassee. The official press bureau in London pays tribute to the Belgians for their brave defense on the allies front in Belgium.

Further progress of the French on the right bank of the Meuse is reported.

Petrograd claims an important victory over the Germans, who are said to be in full retreat. The czar's troops' position on the left bank of the Vistula now is secure.

(By International News Service)
Paris, Oct. 22.—The fury of the German attack on the allies now extends across the frontier into Belgium. The attacks continue with unabated violence, but have thus far been repulsed, according to the statement of the war office this afternoon.

London, Oct. 22.—It is reported that the allies have destroyed the railroad between Amsterdam and Ghent.

A Reuter despatch from Amsterdam says eleven British warships bombarded the Germans on the Belgian coast for thirty-six hours and that the Germans are retreating in the direction of Middle Kirke.

The situation in the Eastern arena is unchanged as to decisive results.

HOSPITAL FUND CAMPAIGN IS ABOUT TO BE STARTED

About the first of the year A. W. Lee made an offer to the board of directors of the Clearfield hospital that he would give them the sum of $25,000, provided the present indebtedness of the hospital was liquidated within a year.

Without any systematic effort to first turn to meet the condition of the hospital, the board of directors has been approximately $8,000. There is a plan to be carried out of $4,000.

Plans are being formulated for a campaign to raise the comparative small balance. It is desired that citizens of Clearfield and vicinity will show their appreciation by contributing.

A FOREIGN WOMAN DESERTS HER BABY

Leaves it in the New York Central Station at Woodland

MOTHER AND CHILD IN PRISON

Lena Angolana, Star Witness in Caro-Mastriano Murder Trial in Clearfield County Court, Tried to Give Her Baby Away to Woodland People—Arrested in This Place.

Last evening, just after the 6:40 train left the New York Central station at Woodland a child's cries were heard, and upon investigation the station agent found a tiny baby wrapped in blankets lying upon a seat in the station. The child continued to cry vigorously, while the people who gathered around it tried to find some means of identifying it. The suspicion arose at once that the child had been deserted and left there purposefully.

Early in the day a foreign woman, who lived at Woodland yesterday morning on the train to New York City, had had a child away from her. Several women in Woodland had seen her and she was the mother of the child.

The Mother Arrested

BOROUGH COUNCIL HOLDS AN INTERESTING SESSION

Borough council was in session about two hours last evening and heard reports on different lines of work in the town. Engineer E. W. Hess made a report on all work done since the last meeting. He reported that the work on the hose houses in the East End and in the Second ward is progressing rapidly and that the material needed to build them was all on the grounds for use. The paving of South Second is being rapidly completed and will very likely be finished in four days. This work was delayed by the rain, but work upon Spruce street has been completed.

Reports of the treasurer, the utility committee and the street commissioner were received and bills presented and ordered to be paid. Payment was authorized to be made to Contractor Ferguson for the curb, gutter and base on South Second street.

The new councilman, Mr. Barton, of the Fourth ward, who was elected to take the place of Mr. Buck, was sworn into office.

CONSTRUCTIVE WORK OF GIFFORD PINCHOT

Here is a Record of Achievement so Great That it Inspired Theodore Roosevelt, Former President of the United States to Say That of "The Many Public Officials Who Under My Administration Rendered Literally Invaluable Service to the People of the United States, He (Pinchot) on the Whole, Stood First."

He took charge of the Forest Service of the United States when there were only eleven persons in it, and left it the best organized bureau in Washington, employing more than 3,000 men.

In 1909, he prevented Richard Achilles Ballinger, Secretary of the Interior under Taft, from handing over to the Morgans and the Guggenheims and Rockefellers, billions of tons of coal in the Alaska fields. This was one of the greatest steals ever attempted in America.

He fought for the bill creating the Child Labor Bureau, for the benefit of the children who work, and did not cease his efforts until the bill became a law.

He was one of the leaders in securing better working conditions for the miners. With the support and co-operation of Roosevelt, Pinchot, John Mitchell, and Joseph A. Holmes were mainly responsible for the creation of the bureau of mines.

He has been a champion of the right of workmen to organize in unions and by every fair means to compel recognition of such unions by employers.

He advocated and fought for the passage of the Esch bill to put an end to the disease called "phossy jaw" by taxing the phosphorous match industry out of existence.

He is one of the leaders in the United States for an honest protective tariff based on the findings of a non-partisan scientific commission.

When head of the Forestry Service he was responsible for initiating and putting into effect an insurance plan to protect the workers in his department.

He joined the fight for the passage of a workmen's compensation bill which was finally passed by the federal government for the benefit of the men employed by the national government.

He took part in the fight for pure food and helped frame the meat inspection law, which the beef trust opposed in vain.

As chief forester, he virtually created the United States Forest Service, through which the national forests are administered.

He was responsible for saving a hundred million acres of public forests to the people, while he held office, in spite of all the powerful corporations and individuals who tried to grab our natural resources could do.

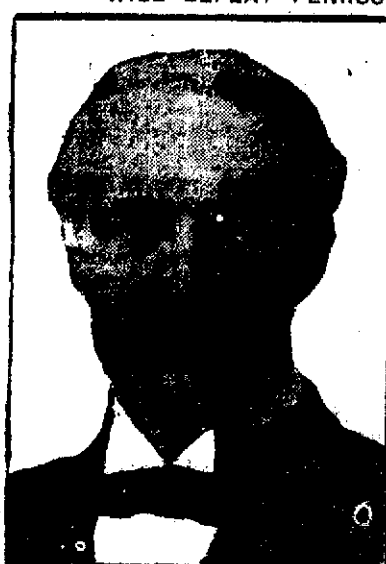

He uncovered the attempts of the magnates to monopolize our natural resources. He laid down a plan, now being followed, to preserve the people's rights and at the same time encourage business development and enterprise.

As head of the National Forest Service he gave a large share of his active interest to helping farmers in all states properly care for their wood lots.

Pinchot was the man behind the Act of June 11, 1905, which opened the national forests to settlement under the homestead law. Over one million acres of farms have been taken up under this act.

He has been an ardent and self-sacrificing worker for the forests and natural resources of Pennsylvania. He worked with J. T. Rothrock, the "father of forestry" in this state, to build up Pennsylvania's forests.

HERE IS THE MAN WHO WILL DEFEAT PENROSE

GIFFORD PINCHOT

Washington Party Candidate for U. S. Senator.

He was a member and secretary of the public lands Commission and bore the brunt of the work.

He is the man who started the fight to save the people's great deposits of coal, and other minerals, and made it an issue.

He checked the growing water power trust and saved millions of dollars for the public.

He is an expert at law making. For twenty years he has been active in shaping important and fundamental legislation in the interests of the people.

He is the man who is responsible for the defeat of the Baker Water Power grab bill, creating a vicious precedent for giving away public rights to water power companies.

He has appeared more often before House and Senate Committees, urging progressive conservation and humanitarian legislation, since his removal from the government service, in 1909, than any other private citizen in the country.

He prevented the passage of a dangerous bill introduced March 28, 1910, by Senator Smoot, which would have allowed the water power grabbers to help themselves to the remaining 12,000,000 horsepower of the public domain now in federal ownership.

He was responsible for the defeat of the vicious Heyburn amendment to the Agricultural bill in the sixty-fifth Congress, which would have ripped up the national forests for the benefit of the timber barons.

He was instrumental in defeating in the House of Representatives on February 23, 1911, the so-called Mondell Alaska Coal Leasing Bill, which would have turned over the coal lands to the grabbers who had been attempting to defraud the government and were caught.

Pinchot was responsible for defeating the nine Ballinger fake "conservation bills" aimed at breaking down federal control of public water powers, coal, oil, phosphates and natural gas, and thus making it easy for the grabbers to raid the public domain.

He formed the National Conservation Association to fight the men who would grab the natural wealth of the country. As president of that body he fought every effort made to take the people's resources without adequate compensation.

He was chairman of the National Conservation Commission and worked with the governors of the various states to safe-guard and develop the resources of their states.

He was a member of and the prime moving spirit in the Inland Waterways Commission to develop the waterways of the country and thus build up a great barrier against railroad domination.

He planned and put into effect a comprehensive system of grazing range control whereby on the government land, cattle and sheep men, whether rich or poor, get a square deal. He lived on the ranges with the stock men until he knew absolute-ly their needs.

He initiated and laid before President Roosevelt the plan to better the conditions of life on the farm. As the result of his work Roosevelt appointed the Country Life Commission August 10, 1908, and Pinchot became one of the leading members of it.

Pinchot suggested and worked for the plan of revising our land laws in order to make public lands more useful to the farmers.

He was a pioneer in the great government work of irrigation and one of the men to whom the people owe most for the great success of this project, which has brought millions of acres under cultivation.

"He played one of the leading parts in the effort to make the national government the chief instrument in developing the irrigation of the arid West," says Theodore Roosevelt of Pinchot, in his autobiography.

Pinchot took a leading part in the scientific organization of the government bureaus at Washington. He put the business of his own department and that of others on a sound modern basis. Pinchot for years has been a leader in this movement to improve the condition of country churches.

He was the leading spirit and the director in the movement to conserve the resources of North America, which resulted in the international gathering at Washington, at which definite steps were taken to preserve the forests, the water power rights and mineral resources of Canada, United States and Mexico.

He founded and maintained at his own expense the Yale Forest School at his home at Milford, Pennsylvania, where field instruction was given to the students.

CENTRE COUNT MINISTERS ASK PALMER TO WITHDRAW

Association Representing All Denominations Urge Concentration of Anti-Penrose Strength on Gifford Pinchot

At a recent wide non-partisan meeting, convened by the Ministerial Association of local opinion and social action of Centre county, representing workers at Harrisburg recently, the sentiment that the Progressive nomination is the one candidate who can defeat Penrose and his system in Pennsylvania has spread all over the state. Additional evidence of the strong hold that the Pinchot candidacy has taken among voters who regard the defeat of Penrose as the important issue of the campaign comes from nine counties in the following manner:

all the Christian denominations of the county, that in view of the political situation, present and prospective, in the state of Pennsylvania, in order to effect the elimination of Boies Penrose and Penroseism, the wise and right thing for Mr. Palmer to do at this juncture is to withdraw from his candidacy for United States Senator in favor of Mr. Pinchot. The above resolution was unanimously adopted in session today. Secretary, MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION OF CENTRE COUNTY.

IMPORTANT DATES.

General election, November 3.
Hettie Jane Dunaway, reader and impersonator, at Woman's club, Nov. 25.
Thanksgiving day, Thursday, November 26.
Christmas, Friday, December 25.
October 22, 1914

Good evening! Remember, one ounce of action is worth a ton of talk when it comes to doing things for Clearfield.

A vote for Palmer is a vote for Penrose.

A vote for Moulthrop is a vote in favor of good government.

The election will be held on November third; be sure you vote right.

Will we go to war with Great Britain over a tank ship belonging to the Standard Oil company?

Brumbaugh on a local option platform of his own making is a horrible example of a schoolmaster abroad.

The kaiser should have remembered that horns sting and that no wise man ever stirs up a hornet's nest.

Some women imagine it is the hat that is being trimmed, but the old man knows that he is the one that is being trimmed.

Hunting accident reports are coming in, but fortunately none of these accidents has occurred in Clearfield county up to this time.

These be Democrats days sure enough, and yet Palmer wants to go to the United States senate to help make conditions worse.

The American people are almost willing to believe that there is no difference between the soldiers of the European nations charged with atrocities.

Tomorrow has been named as a fall arbor day, and school children are not only urged to plant trees, but to protect them after they have been planted.

Englishmen in America do not want to go back home and fight for their country, and many of those who are at home would be glad if they could get away from going to war.

With a war tax of one dollar and seventy-five cents a barrel on beer, the brewers will soon be asking the public to "buy a keg" to help them out of their financial difficulties.

Clearfield county would be ably represented in the state legislature if Woodland, Lippert and Boone were to be elected to the assembly, and that is why these candidates will be elected.

Christmas is coming on, and it begins to look as if the kaiser would not eat his Christmas dinner in Paris or that the czar would partake of roast turkey in Berlin. The joke is on somebody.

Will the burres issue a proclamation warning boys and young men to keep within the law in their celebration of All Hallows' Eve? The citizens are entitled to have their property rights respected.

A quite noticeable improvement in the running of automobiles and motorcycles in this town has resulted from the passage of the ordinance regulating mufflers on these machines. It is creditable to the motorists that thus far none of them has been arrested for violating the ordinance.

Colonel Roosevelt has disappointed many people by cutting out of his itinerary in this state his contemplated trip to Clearfield county, but the Colonel is needed in New York more than he is in Pennsylvania, where there are a sufficient number of good citizens to bring about the ousting of Penroseism from the political map of the state.

MORE ISLANDS SEIZED

Japan has taken over a number of islands in the Marshall, Ladrones and other Pacific ground, "for military purposes only." The seizing of islands in the Pacific ocean seems to be a habit with the Japanese, and it is hoped that the Nippon government is telling the truth when it declares it has no intention of retaining these islands. None of these islands belong to the United States, but they are close enough to American territorial possessions to make their occupancy, even temporarily, unpleasant to this government.

Thus far in the European war Japan has not distinguished herself in her encounters with the Germans. While there cannot be a considerable number of the kaiser's subjects in Taing Tau the Japanese have not made much impression upon the forts of that province. Being within striking distance of the foe it would seem as if the Japanese ought to have ousted the Germans in short order. It looks, under the circumstances, very much as if Japan is making her attack upon the Germans in China a mere subterfuge to hide her real intention of extending the sphere of her activities until she has gained a position from which she may demand part of the spoils after the war is over.

PRESIDENT PRAISES PALMER.

President Wilson has given A. Mitchell Palmer a clean bill of health and advises the Democrats of Pennsylvania to elect him to the United States senate. If any candidate in this state stands in need of a recommendation that candidate is Palmer. But President Wilson's laudation of the Democratic bo. will not have any effect upon the coming election. The people of Pennsylvania are just now feeling the direct effects of the tariff legislation by congress, and they are not in a humor to support at the polls a man who helped toward the passage of that law.

Pennsylvania voters still cling to the idea that the Democrats are not mentally or morally equipped to legislate for the best interests of the country. The finishing touches are being put to the war tax bill, a measure which the Democrats find necessary in order that the heavy deficit in treasury receipts caused by the operation of the Democratic tariff may be made good. When they realize that they must pay this tax because of Democratic blundering and incompetency the voters of Pennsylvania will turn from Palmer and support Gifford Pinchot, who advocates placing the tariff in the hands of a commission which would regulate the tariff in accordance with the rules of good sense not at the dictation of any political party.

A Prayer for U. S.
God bless the old United States,
God keep her people strong;
God guard the peace within her gates
And fill her land with song.
Teach us who dwell beneath her flag
To cherish peaceful ways;
To cease of cannon's strength to brag
And uniforms to praise.

God bless the old United States,
Where freedom's banner flies,
Where joyously the mother waits
With bright and smiling eyes,
The father, coming home at night,
His day of toiling done,
And where to meet him with delight
His happy children run.

Here all the tears are honest tears,
And pain is honest pain,
And here, secure throughout the years,

The toilers' homes remain.
Here firesides are not desolate
By needless shot and shell,
But honor and reward await,
The men who labor well.

God bless the old United States,
God bless her people, too;
God keep forever at her gates
The old red, white and blue,
And may its beauties never die,
But every year increase;
God grant that flag shall ever fly

Pinchot Popular With The Anti-Rum People

"Is that the man who's going to put rum out of the state? I want to see him."

A woman pushed through the crowd that gathered around the country store at Sykesville Jefferson county, last Friday, when Gifford Pinchot, the Washington party candidate who is out to defeat Boise Penrose for the United States senate, stopped on his campaign tour of the county, says the Philadelphia North American.

The woman was near middle age and haggard. A child was clinging to her hand. She looked as if she had walked some distance, perhaps from the desolate coke settlement that edges the town with a border of blackened landscape. She was as grim and gaunt as the devastated land that surrounds the suffocating furnaces.

She looked long and earnestly at the man who stood with bared head on the porch of the grocery store. She edged near so she could hear what he had to say. Her eyes searched his face as if she would wring a promise from it. She listened with devouring ears to his words. Apparently she understood, apparently she was satisfied, for she turned away with a glimmer of light in her eyes.

"I hope he wins," she said, and then she gathered her shawl about her. She walked slowly toward the edge of the town where the tiered crosses of the Polish cemetery gleamed in the sunshine.

A group of boys scuffled about the automobile in which the Washington party candidates had arrived. Suddenly one of them shouted to the others:

"That's the man that's going to lick Penrose. If he gets elected we won't have any more saloons. That's what the evangelist told us. Let's look at him."

They scurried over to the edge of the crowd and for ten minutes they listened to what Gifford Pinchot had to say.

It is doubtful if anybody who started out to find Sykesville would know how to get there. But it is on the map, and, tiny as it is and remote from the big centers of things, it is one of the most aroused settlements of Pennsylvania.

Perhaps there are not 100 houses within range of the general store. The men, who are chiefly foreigners, work in the mines and the coke furnaces, and a few of them own farms. The women do what women always do in such settlements; they stay home and try to feed the men and the children.

An Appeal to the People of Pennsylvania.

It is in the interest of the public—whose chief concern is good service and safety—that the Extra Crew Law now on the Statute books of Pennsylvania and other States be repealed. This law causes a waste of $1,000,000 annually in the employment of unnecessary men on the Pennsylvania System alone. No one is more concerned than the Pennsylvania Railroad Company in securing maximum safety on its lines. Every train on this railroad has a full crew, and this extra expenditure adds nothing to safety or public convenience. The same money had much better be spent to remove grade crossings, improve tracks, signals, and bridges, and buy steel cars. This extra crew law, which compels unnecessary expenditures, is one of the factors which menaces the ability of this Company to pay present rates of wages to that great body of employees whose activities are needed.

The Public Service Commission should see to it that all trains are properly manned. Such action would amply protect employees and the public. We appeal to the people in their own interest, we appeal to our employees in their best interest, to ask their representatives in the next Pennsylvania Legislature to repeal the Extra Crew Law.

The Last Shot

By
FREDERICK PALMER

(Copyright, 1914, by Charles Scribner's Sons)

Westerling and his aide and valet, acquiring their way as strangers, found the new staff headquarters of the Grays established in an army building, where Bouchard had been assigned to his duties, back of the Gray range. As their former chief entered a room, in the disorder of maps and packing-passes, the staff-officers rose from their work to stand at salute like stone images, in respect to a field-marshal's rank. There was no word of greeting but a telling silence before Turcas spoke. His voice had lost its parchment crackle and become natural. The blue veins on his bulging temples were a little more pronounced, his thin features a little more plucked, but otherwise he was unchanged and he seemed equal to another strain as heavy as the one he had undergone.

"I've Come for Westerling."

"We have a new government, a new premier," he said. "The old premier was killed by a shot from a crowd that he was addressing from the balcony of the palace. After this, the capital became quieter. As we get in touch with the divisions, we find the army in better shape than we had feared it would be. There is a recovery of spirit, owing to our being on our own soil."

"Yes," replied Westerling, drowning in the stares and grasping at a straw. "Only a panic, as I said. If—his voice rising hoarsely and catching in his throat."

"We have a new government, a new premier," Turcas repeated, with firm, methodical politeness. Westerling looked from one face to another with shiny eyes, lowered them before Bouchard. "There's a room ready for your Excellency upstairs," Turcas continued. "The orderly will show you the way."

Now Westerling grasped the fact that he was no longer chief of staff. He drew himself up in a desperate attempt at dignity; the staff saluted again, and, uncertainly, he followed the orderly, with the aide and valet still in loyal attendance.

Two figures were in the doorway: a heavy-set market woman with a fringe of down on her lip and a cadaverously tidily dressed old man, who might have been a superannuated schoolmaster, with a bronze cross won in the war of forty years ago on his breast and his eyes burning with the youthful fire of Grandfather Fragnin's.

"They got the premier in the capital. We've come for Westerling! We want to know what he did with our sons! We want to know why he was beaten!" cried the market woman. "Yes," said the veteran. "We want him to explain his lies. Why did he keep the truth from us? We were ready to fight, but not to be treated like babies. This is the twentieth century!"

"We want Westerling! Tell Westerling to come out!" rose impatient shouts behind the two figures in the doorway.

"You are sure that he has one?" whispered Turcas to Westerling's aide. "Yes," he was the choking answer—"yes. It is better than that—with a glance toward the mob. 'I left my own on the table.'"

"We can't save him! We shall have to let them—"

Turcas's voice was drowned by a great roar of cries, with no word except "Westerling!" distinguishable, that pierced every crack of the house. A wave of movement starting from the rear drove the veteran and the market woman and a dozen others through the doorway toward the stairs. Then the sound of a shot was heard overhead.

"The man you seek is dead!" said Turcas, stepping in front of the crowd, his features unrelenting in authority. "Now, go back to your work and leave us to ours."

"I understand, sir," said the veteran. "We've no argument with you."

After Lanstron's announcement to the Brown staff of his decision not to cross the frontier, there was a restless movement in the chairs around the table, and the grimaces on most of the faces were those with which a practical man regards a Utopian proposal. The vice-chief was drumming on the table edge and looking steadily at a point in front of his fingers. If Lanstron resigned he became chief.

"Partow might have this dream before he won, but would he now?" asked the vice-chief. "No. He would go on!"

"Yes," said another officer. "The world will ridicule the suggestion; our people will overwhelm us with their anger. The Grays will take it for a sign of weakness."

"Not if we put the situation rightly to them," answered Lanstron. "Not if we go to them as brave adversary to brave adversary, in a fair spirit."

"We can—we shall take the range!" the vice-chief went on in a burst of rigid conviction when he saw that opinion was with him. "Nothing can stop this army now!" He struck the table edge with his fist, his shoulders stiffening.

"Please—please, don't!" implored Marta softly. "It sounds so like Westerling!"

The vice-chief started as if he had received a sharp pin-prick. His shoulders unconsciously relaxed. He began a fresh study of a certain point on the table top. Lanstron, looking first at one and then at another, spoke again, his words as measured as they ever had been in military discussion and eloquent. He began outlining his own message which would go with Partow's to the premier, to the nation, to every regiment of the Browns, to the Grays, to the world. He set forth why the Browns, after tasting the courage of the Grays, should realize that they could not take their range. Partow had not taught him to put himself in other men's places in vain. The boy who had kept up his friendship with engine drivers after he was an officer knew how to sink the plummet into human emotions. He reminded the Brown soldiers that there had been a providential answer to the call of "God with us!" he reminded the people of the lives that would be lost to no end but to engender hatred; he begged the army and the people not to break faith with that principle of "Not for theirs, but for ours," which had been their strength.

"I should like you all to sign it—to make it simply the old form of the staff has the honor to report," he said finally.

There was a hush as he finished—the hush of a deep impression when one man waits for another to speak. All were looking at him except the vice-chief, who was still staring at the table as if he had heard nothing. Yet every word was etched on his mind. The man whose name was the symbol of victory to the soldiers, who would be more than ever a hero as the news of his charge with the African Braves traveled along the lines, would go on record to his soldiers as saying that they could not take the Gray range. This was a handicap that the vice-chief did not care to accept; and he knew how to turn a phrase as well as to make a soldierly decision. He looked up smilingly to Marta.

"I have decided that I had rather not be a Westerling, Miss Galland," he said. "We'll make it unanimous. And you," he burst out to Lanstron—"you legatee of old Partow; I've always said that he was the biggest man of our time. He has proved it by catching the spirit of our time and incarnating it."

Vaguely, in the whirl of her joy, Marta heard the chorus of assent as the officers sprang to their feet in the elation of being at one with their chief again. Lanstron caught her arm, fearing that she was going to fall, but a burning question rose in her mind to steady her.

"Then my shame—my sending men to slaughter—my sacrifice was not in vain?" she exclaimed.

"The sea of people packed in the great square of the Brown capital made a roar like the thunder of waves against a breakwater at sight of a white spot on a background of gray stone, which was the head of an eminent statesman."

"It looks as if our government would last the week out," the premier chuckled as he turned to his colleagues at the cabinet table.

As yet only the brief bulletins whose publication in the newspapers had aroused the public to a frenzy had been received. The cabinet, as eager for details as the press, had remained up, awaiting a fuller official account.

"We have a long communication in preparation," the staff had telegraphed. "Meanwhile, the following is submitted."

"Good heavens! It's not from the army! It's from the grave!" exclaimed the premier as he read the first paragraphs of Partow's message. "Of all the concealed dynamite ever!" he gasped as he grasped the full meaning of the document, that piece of news, as staggering as the victory itself, that had lain in the staff vaults for years. "Well, we needn't give it out to the press; at least, not until after mature consideration," he declared when they had reached the end of Partow's appeal. "Now we'll hear what the staff has to say for itself after gratifying the wish of a dead man," he added as a messenger gave him another sheet.

"The staff, in loyalty to its dead leader who made victory possible, and in loyalty to the principles of defense for which the army fought, begs to say to the nation—"

It was four o'clock in the morning when this dispatch concluded with "We heartily agree with the foregoing," and the cabinet read the names of all the general staff and the corps and division commanders. Coursing crowds in the streets were still shouting hoarsely and sometimes drunkenly. "On to the Gray capital! Nothing can stop us now!" The premier tried to imagine what a sea of faces in the great square would look like in a rage. It was better than the

ple in a passion for retribution and a headless army that was supposed to charge across the frontier at dawn. "The thing is sheer madness!" he cried. "It's insubordination! I'll have it suppressed! The army must go on to gratify public demand. I'll show the staff that they are not in the saddle. They'll obey orders!"

He tried to get Lanstron on the long distance. "Sorry, but the chief has retired," answered the officer on duty sleepily. "In fact, all the rest of the staff have, with orders that they are not to be disturbed before ten."

"Tell them that the premier, the head of the government, their commander, is speaking!"

"Yes, sir. The orders not to disturb them are quite positive, and as a junior I could not do so except by their orders as superiors. The chief, before retiring, however, repeated to me, in case any inquiry came from you, sir, that there was nothing he could add to the staff's message to the nation and the army. It is to be given to the soldiers the first thing in the morning, and he will let you know how they regard it."

"Confound these machine minds that spring their surprises as fully executed plans!" exclaimed the premier.

"It's true—Partow and the staff have covered everything—met every argument. There is nothing more for them to say," said the foreign minister.

"But what about the indemnity?" demanded the finance minister. He was thinking of victory in the form of piles of gold in the treasury.

This question, too, was answered.

"War has never brought prosperity," Partow had written. "Its purpose is to destroy, and destruction can never be construction. The conclusion of a war has often assured a period of peace; and peace gave the impetus of prosperity attributed to war. A man is strong in what he achieves, not through the gifts he receives or the goods he steals. Indemnity will not raise another blade of wheat in our land. To take it from a beaten man will foster in him the desire to beat his adversary in turn and recover the amount and more. Then we shall have the apprehension of war always in the air, and soon another war and more destruction. Remove the danger of a European cataclysm, and any sum extorted from the Grays becomes paltry beside the wealth that peace will create. An indemnity makes the purpose of the courage of the Grays in their assaults and of the Browns in their resistance that of the burglar and the looter. There is no money value to a human life when it is your own; and our soldiers gave their lives. Do not cheapen their service."

"Considering the part that we played at The Hague," observed the foreign minister, "it would be rather inconsistent for us not to—"

"There is only one thing to do. Lanstron has got us!" replied the premier.

The premier of the Browns found himself talking over the long distance to the premier of the Grays in as neighborly a fashion as if they had adjoining estates and were arranging a matter of community interest.

"You have been so fine in waiving an indemnity," said the premier of the Grays, "that Turcas suggests we pay for all the damage done to property on your side by our invasion. I'm sure our people will rise to the suggestion. Their mood has overwhelmed every preconceived notion of mine. In place of the old suspicion that a Brown could do nothing except with a selfish motive is the desire to be as fair as the Browns. And the practical way the people look at it makes me think that it will be enduring."

"I think so, for the same reason," responded the premier of the Browns. "They say it is good business. It means prosperity and progress for both countries."

"After all, a soldier comes out the hero of the great peace movement," concluded the premier of the Grays. "A soldier took the tricks with our own cards. Old Partow was the greatest statesman of us all."

"No doubt of that!" agreed the premier of the Browns. "It's a sentiment to which every premier of ours who ever tried to down him would have readily subscribed!"

The every-day statesman smiles when he sees the people smile and grows angry when they grow angry. Now and then appears an inscrutable genius who finds out what is brewing in their brains and brings it to a head. He is the epoch maker. Such an one was that little Corsican, who gave a stagnant pool the storm it needed, until he became overfed and mistook his ambition for a continuation of his youthful prescience.

Marta had yet to bear the shock of Westerling's death. After learning the manner of it she went to her room, where she spent a haunted, sleepless night. The morning found her still tortured by her visualization of the picture of him, irresolute as the mob pressed around the Gray headquarters.

"It is as if I had murdered him!" she said. "I let him make love to me—I let my hand remain in his once—but that was all, Lanny. I—I couldn't have borne any more. Yet that was enough—enough!"

"But we know now, Marta," Lanstron pleaded, "that the premier of the Grays held Westerling to a compact that he should not return alive if he lost. He could not have won, even though you had not helped us against him. He would only have lost more lives and brought still greater indignation on his head. His fate was inevitable—and he was a soldier."

But his reasoning only racked her with a shudder.

"If he had only died fighting!" Marta replied. "He died like a rat in a trap and I—I set the trap!"

"No, destiny set it," put in Mrs. Galland.

Lanstron dropped down beside Marta's chair.

"Yes, destiny set it," he said, imploringly.

"Just as it set your part for you. And, Marta," Mrs. Galland went on gently, with what Marta had once

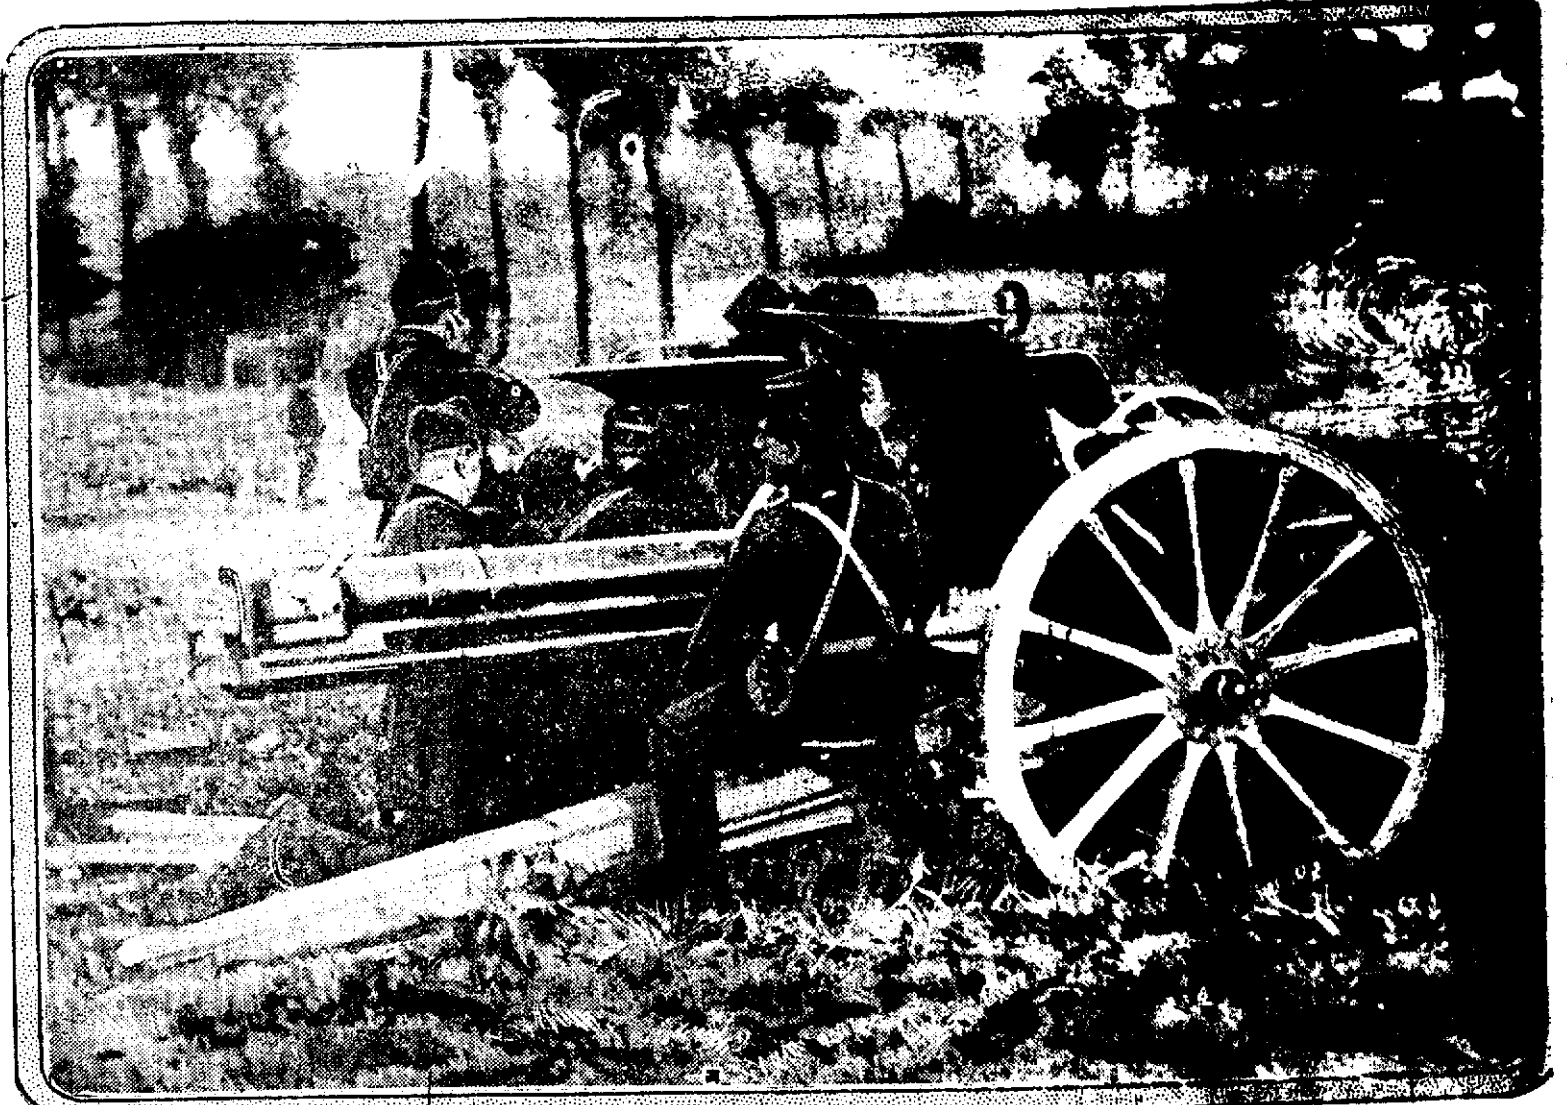

"Good Heavens! It's Not From the Army. It's From the Grave!"

"We must jump in at the head of the procession and receive the mud or the bouquets as it happens."

With Partow's and the staff's appeals went an equally earnest one from the premier and his cabinet. Naturally, the noisy element of the cities was the first to find words. It shouted in rising anger that Lanstron had betrayed the nation. Army officers whom Partow had retired for leisurely habits said that he and Lanstron had struck at their own calling. But the average man and woman, in a daze from the shock of the appeals after a night's celebration, were reading and wondering and asking their neighbors' opinions. If not in Partow's then in the staff's message they found the mirror that set their own critical professions staring at them.

Before they had made up their minds the correspondents at the front had set the wires singing to the evening editions; for Lanstron had directed that they be given the run of the army's lines at daybreak. They told of soldiers awakening after the debauch of yesterday's fighting, normal and rested, glowing with the security of possession of the frontier and responding to their leaders' sentiment; of officers of the type favored by Partow who would bring the industry that commanded respect to any calling, taking Lanstron's views as worthy of their profession; of that irrepressible poet laureate of the soldiers, Captain Stransky, I. C. (iron cross), breaking forth in a new song to an old tune, expressing his brotherhood ideas in a "We have—ours—let—them—keep—their—chords—that—was—spreading—from—regiment—to—regiment."

This left the retired officers to grumble in their corners that war was no longer a gentleman's vocation, and so showed the progress of their natural

Women and Babies Their Prey.

In a series of six cartoons the Hennepin Brewing Company of Moorhead, Minnesota, pictures the gradual evolution of a healthy woman into a healthy and beautiful society belle under the magic treatment of "Hennepin Beer". The first and most significant picture of the series shows a family cable. The father has a glass of beer in his hand; mother a glass of beer in her hand; the little boy, aged about six, has a glass of beer in his hand.

The Hennepin people are not the only brewers who outrage public sentiment by such indecencies. Pabst makes a specialty of this, and all the leading breweries are doing their utmost to cultivate the taste for beer in women and babies.

It is nothing to them that beer breaks down the finer feminine instincts. They care nothing that beer has probably introduced more women called the wisdom of mothers. "Lanny lives and lives for you. Your destiny is life and to make the most of life, as you always have. Isn't it, Marta?"

"Yes," she breathed after a pause, in conviction, as she pressed her mother's hands. "Yes, you have a gift of making things simple and clear."

Then she looked up to Lanstron and the flame in her eyes, whose leaping, spontaneous passion he already knew, held something of the eternal, as her arms crept around his neck.

"You are life, Lanny! You are the destiny of today and tomorrow!" (THE END.)

to disreputable practices than any other one agency. It is of slight consequence to them that the police brutalizes courtesans and corrupts. It means nothing to them that the children that have not yet come are blighted, stunted, diseased, mangled and predestined to failure because of the drinking habits so earnestly encouraged among the mothers of the day.

It is all a matter of dividends to the brewers.

The monument to George Washington in the Capital City is 550 feet high. If the dollars spent for alcoholic drinks were erected into a monument one foot square, it would make a memorial to John Barleycorn 67 miles high, 470 times the height of Washington's monument.

"RABBITT" MARANVILLE WAS A TINNER'S APPRENTICE

By Frank G. Menke.

New York, October 21.—Walter

Maranville, the greatest shortstop in the game, broke into football against his father's wishes. Pere Maranville thought that "Rabbit" would make a mighty good tinner, but as a ball player—bah!

Several years ago the "Rabbit" played amateur baseball in odd moments and his work attracted the attention of the New Bedford, Mass. team. "Rabbit" got an offer from the New Bedford team and went to his dad about it.

"Turn it down," said Papa Maranville to "Rabbit," who just then was learning the tinner's trade. "In a few years you'll develop into a good tinner and you'll make good wages—at least $25 a week. As a ball player you'll never make good. You're too small."

"Rabbit," however, had ambitions to become a ball player. He thought he could make good even if his father didn't. He disregarded the advice of his dad and signed up with New Bedford.

"You'll be some—hands up will I," said his father when he heard what "Rabbit" had done. "You'll never make good. They'll fire you in a mighty short order. And you'll get so used to loafing that you won't want to work at your tinning job again. Instead of having a son that I can be proud of, a son who works hard at a regular trade, I'll have a son who won't be working at anything."

Was Papa right—or, was Papa wrong?

Incidentally, it might be stated that Maranville, in his two years with New Bedford and three years with the Braves, has earned about 20 times as much money as he would have earned in the tinning trade, and that during the next five years, unless an accident wrecks his future, he will earn more money than he would have earned in 40 years as a tinner.

SCHMIDT REAL HERO OF SERIES S, SAYS MACK

Charley Schmidt in his post mortem on the recent world's series. Connie Mack, manager of the hunched Philadelphia Athletics, said: "I think that Schmidt, the Braves' husky first sacker, was one of the real heroes of the series. The plays he made in the opening inning of the first game at Shibe Park had a greater effect on the Braves and my own players than any others."

We want to enter a protest against the reckless shooting that is characteristic of many of these hunters. Yesterday we heard the report of a gun and looking in the direction indicated saw the smoke rise about 50 or 60 rods from us, and at the same time heard the shot rattle through the boughs of a small chestnut right over our head and only 8 or 10 feet above us.

WAR MAPS FOR PROGRESS READERS

Valuable Aids to Understanding
of European Situation

A HANDSOME PIECE OF WORK

With These Maps the Public Can Tell at a Glance the Location of the Cities and Towns Where the Fighting Nations are Struggling for Supremacy—How Maps May be Purchased.

In keeping with its determination to give the readers of the Progress the latest and best news of the great European war, the management of this paper has decided to distribute to the public at a nominal cost to the people an official map of the territory in which the big armies of the warring powers are fighting. With the aid of this map the citizen can trace accurately the movements of the armies and discover the scenes of battles as reported day by day in the news columns of the Progress.

This map is large, is printed in five colors, with the names and locations of the towns and cities, mountains, rivers and other data necessary to a complete understanding of the situation in the war zone. The map was originally made in Europe by the war process, at once expensive and complete, and has been reproduced in this country on a copier. The type is clear and the plan is sought by the man who is at all times interested in the war and its progress. On the back of this map is to be found the latest and most authentic information regarding the nations now engaged in the conflict.

The Progress has been able to procure a number of these maps for distribution to those who wish to have an intelligent conception of the great events which are happening in Europe. To secure one of these maps the reader will cut the coupon from another page of this paper and present it, with ten cents, at the counter of the business office of the Progress and one of the maps will be handed to him. As the number of copies of the map which the Progress was able to get is limited it will be well for those who wish copies to call early.

The maps will be sent by mail either in town or out of town for 15 cents in coin, stamps or money order.

They are really the most valuable maps of Europe that are in existence, and will prove a source of profit to those who wish to learn more than they know of the countries across the sea. If you wish to keep posted on the movements of the immense armies in the greatest conflict the world has ever known, get one of these maps at once.

SCENES and characters in the three act comedy, "The Misleading Lady," the big laughing success by Paul Dickey and Charles Goddard, authors of "The Ghost Breaker." "The Misleading Lady" recently closed an entire season's run at the Fulton Theater, New York, and is as thrilling as a melodrama as well as being uproariously funny.

BE PRETTY! TURN GRAY HAIR DARK

Try Grandmother's old Favorite Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Almost everybody knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray; also ends dandruff, itching scalp and stops falling hair. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is messy and troublesome. Nowadays by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe for about 50 cents.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy.

MORE RETRENCHMENT BY THE PENNSY RAILROAD

A gang of men were busy in the Pennsylvania station at Pittsburgh Sunday morning jerking out the swinging desk telephones in the offices of the station and substituting therefor the ordinary desk sets. A large number of the swinging variety were removed as most of the office desks were equipped with them.

The reason for the change is that three is 50 cents a year saved in having the ordinary telephone and the change is part of the Pennsylvania's economy program. The advantage of the instrument that were removed was that they could be swung from one side of a wide desk to another.

Warning on Explosives

On the Pittsburgh division of the Pennsylvania lines west, conductors of trains that pick up cars labeled "Inflammable" or "explosive," whether empty or loaded, must make known the fact to every member of the train crew, including the engineer and fireman. At terminals the yardmaster must give such notice on a prescribed form.

Signal System Extended

The automatic electric block signal system of the Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburgh railway was placed in service between Buffalo, N. Y., and Salamanca, N. Y., this week. This stretch of 63 miles brings the total of miles covered by the system up to 215 miles of road so protected, and the system is being extended to cover the entire road.

The work was recently begun after the completion of installing telephone for train dispatching, the two added safeguards being the latest factors in modern railroad operation.

Railway Notes

The Pennsylvania railroad spends $55,000 a day for coal. This aggregates $20,075,000 a year.

Railroad equipment men say that not since the panic of 1901 has such complete stagnation of the equipment markets been witnessed.

There is no foundation for reports that the Pennsylvania Railroad company will acquire the Buffalo & Susquehanna Railway company.

The United States Steel corporation has recently taken the following orders for rails: Minneapolis & St. Louis, 1,500 tons; Toledo, On Western Railway of Alabama, 1,100 tons.

Recent orders received by the Baldwin locomotive works include one switcher for the Hoboken Manufacturing railroad, and one Mogul type for the Cuban-American Sugar company of New York.

Pennsylvania steel has received an order for 550 tons of steel from the Southern Railway for a viaduct over the Tyre river, Georgia.

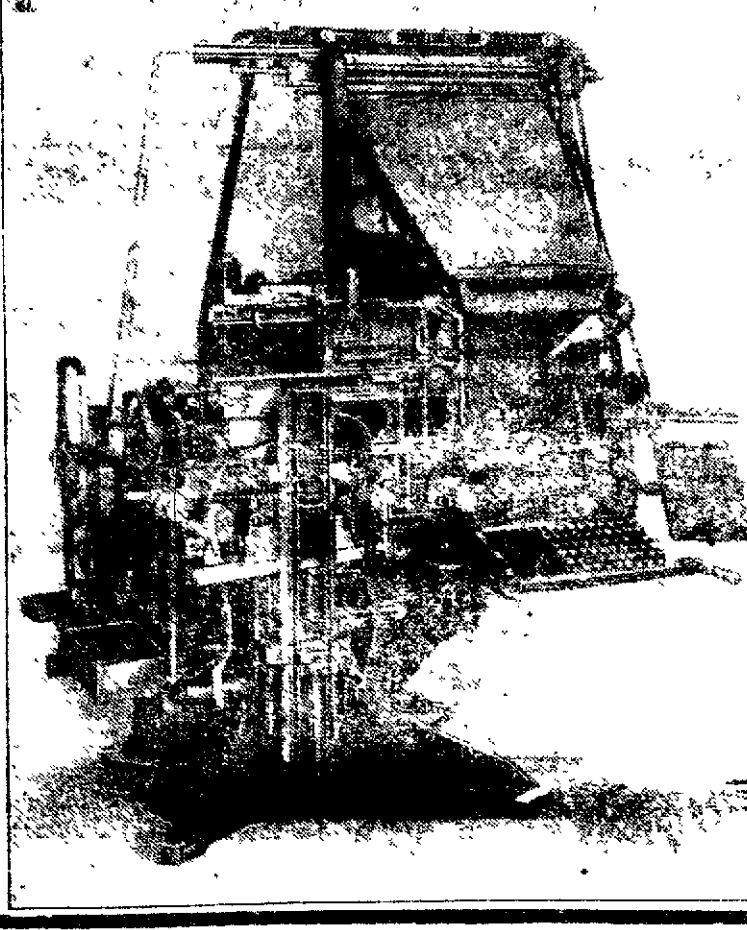

Since August 1 seventy-four companies have either passed, reduced or deferred dividends. In the group are railroad companies.

child and knew nothing of the matter, but later she confessed that the child was hers and that she had left it at the Woodland station to get rid of it, hoping that some one would take it. She had come from New York city on the morning train and when she could now give the child away had decided to leave it.

Star Witness in Murder Trial
The mother was taken to the county jail and the child given to her. She was the star witness in the Paul Caro and Ralph Mastriano murder trial in this county last May, and the murdered man was the father of the child. Lena's parents live in the east end, and she has lived with them until recently.

Escorted by Four Officers.
Some little amusement was afforded spectators when the baby arrived at the county jail last evening. The baby is six weeks old and none too robust, neither did there seem to be anything about the child which would lead anybody to believe that it was a desperado in disguise. And yet the infant was escorted to the prison by four officers of the law, two policemen and two constables.

Nothing occurred on the way from the station to the jail to show that the baby was inclined to be vicious, but the four stalwart men breathed a sigh of relief when the prison cell closed behind the infant.

It is reported that Sheriff McCloskey was compelled to act as nurse for the baby during the night, walking the floor with it and administering soothing syrup, as the child was fretful, whether from colic or the fright it had received when it was arrested by four big men deponent further sayeth not.

IN THE MOVIES

LOVE AND ROMANCE IN PICTURES AT THE GLOBE

"The Barrier of Ignorance." Emerson, a young physician, loves a Nancy, an ignorant mountain girl. Mrs. Marshall, his sister, urges Nancy to break her engagement to him, saying that she will ruin his career. This she does. After a time Nancy marries a mountaineer. When her daughter is old enough to go to school she decides to send her to Emerson, reminding him of the past and asking him to educate her. The husband objects, and when he learns what she has done shoots his wife. In the end the now eminent physician performs an operation which saves Nancy's life and her husband forgives him. At the Globe tonight.

"Smiles of Fortune," an amusing story of a gruff old uncle who commands his nephew, who is as solemn as an owl, to present a smiling face when he comes to see him. The nephew can't smile, so he goes to a beauty specialist, who manufactures a smile. At the Globe tonight.

"Tobacco Industry" is a film showing how tobacco is grown and prepared for the market. At the Globe tonight.

"The Missing Jewels" Jim, a trawler man, finds a string of pearls and, ignorant of their value, places them around the neck of his 7-year old daughter. They are valued at $30,000 and were lost by Mrs. Vaughn, a society matron. A jeweler sees the string of pearls around the child's neck and follows her home. The father is arrested, but Mrs. Vaughn has him freed. At the Globe tonight.

"HE NEVER SAID A WORD" AT OPERA HOUSE TONIGHT

"The Line Rider." The young line rider was fearless, both in loving and fighting. He ran a desperate chance when he went after the cattle thieves, but his reward was unexpected and great. It is a gripping drama of the cattle range and as played by the Eclair company the picture with its picturesque setting is wonderfully interesting. At the opera house tonight.

"He Never Said a Word." Robert Deering comes to visit his uncle, who is an attending physician at a deaf and dumb school, on the evening of the weekly entertainment. The uncle instructs him how to talk by signs to the inmates. He manages to pass the evening, which is rather dull, until he meets a very pretty girl, whom he supposes to be a "dummy" also and she in turn thinks that he cannot talk, but at last explanations are made. At the opera house tonight.

"Cuckooville Goes Skating." Is an amusing comedy at the opera house this evening.

HON. WILLIAM H. BERRY WILL TALK TO MEN NEXT SUNDAY

Must Testify in Order to Save Herself From Conviction for the Murder—Her Lawyers Now Believe It Will Be Necessary to Put Her on the Stand

(By International News Service)
Mineola, Oct. 22.—Frank Farrell, a tramp engineer, was on the stand in the Carman murder trial this afternoon. He testified that he had seen the woman who was shot in the back of the head, and that he had seen her again after the shooting.

HOSPITAL FUND CAMPAIGN IS ABOUT TO BE STARTED

About the first of the year A. W. Lee made an offer to the board of directors of the Clearfield hospital that he would give them the sum of $25,000, provided the present indebtedness of the hospital was liquidated within a year.

Without any systematic effort to first turn to meet the condition of the hospital, the board of directors has been unable to raise the sum of $25,000.

Plans are being formulated for a campaign to raise the sum of $25,000, and it is expected that the campaign will be successful.

A FOREIGN WOMAN DESERTS HER BABY

Leaves it in the New York Central Station at Woodland

MOTHER AND CHILD IN PRISON

Lena Angolana, Star Witness in Caro-Mastriano Murder Trial in Clearfield County Court, Tried to Give Her Baby Away to Woodland People—Arrested in This Place.

Last evening, just after the 6:40 train left the New York Central station at Woodland, a child's cries were heard, and upon investigation the station agent found a tiny baby wrapped in blankets lying upon a seat in the station. The child continued to cry vigorously, while the people who gathered around it tried to find some means of identifying it. The suspicion arose at once that the child had been deserted and left there purposefully.

Early in the day a foreign woman, who was at Woodland yesterday morning on the train to New York, had had a child away from her, and she was seen to be crying at the time she was on the train.

The Mother Arrested
The woman who was seen to be crying at the time she was on the train, was arrested by the police at Woodland, and she was taken to the Clearfield County Jail.

By order of the Russian emperor, the students of the universities and high schools have been called to the colors. These youths are ordinarily exempt from war service.

BOROUGH COUNCIL HOLDS AN INTERESTING SESSION

Borough council was in session about two hours last evening and heard reports on different lines of work in the town. Engineer E. W. Hess made a report on all work done since the last meeting. He reported that the work on the hose houses in the East End and in the Second ward is progressing rapidly and that the material needed to build them was all on the grounds for use. The paving of South Second is being rapidly completed and will very likely be finished in four days. This work was delayed by the rain, but work upon Spruce street has been completed.

Reports of the treasurer, the utility committee and the street commissioner were received and bills presented and ordered to be paid. Payment was authorized to be made to Contractor Ferguson for the curb, gutter and base on South Second street.

The new councilman, Mr. Barton, of the Fourth ward, who was elected to take the place of Mr. Buck, was sworn into office.

"The last remaining Russian troops have fled from Galicia into Russian territory."

"Hungary has been cleared of Russians and a German administration has supplanted the Russian government in Russian Poland, with headquarters at Somovic."

Russians Take Offensive
Petrograd, Oct. 22.—The official announcement of the war department today is:

"Our troops are taking the offensive along the large stretch of the front, in Russian Poland, sweeping away the resistance of the German rear guards and driving them at the point of the bayonet from forests and villages and taking many prisoners."

There has been heavy fighting south of Przemysl for the last six days. The Austrian losses are tremendous."

Germans Near Warsaw
The Russian statement today fails to disguise the fact that German troops are within a few miles of Warsaw and that the Russians are using troops from Asia to fill the line against the Germans.

CONSTRUCTIVE WORK OF GIFFORD PINCHOT

Here is a Record of Achievement so Great That it Inspired Theodore Roosevelt Jr. Former President of the United States to Say That of "The Many Public Officials Who Under My Administration Rendered Literally Invaluable Service to the People of the United States, He (Pinchot) on the Whole, Stood First."

He took charge of the Forest Service of the United States when there were only eleven persons in it, and left it the best organized bureau in Washington, employing more than 3,000 men.

In 1909, he prevented Richard Achilles Ballinger, Secretary of the Interior under Taft, from handing over to the Morgans and the Guggenheims and Rockefellers, billions of tons of coal in the Alaska fields. This was one of the greatest steals ever attempted in America.

He fought for the bill creating the Child Labor Bureau, for the benefit of the children who work, and did not cease his efforts until the bill became a law.

He was one of the leaders in securing better working conditions for the miners. With the support and co-operation of Roosevelt, Pinchot, John Mitchell, and Joseph A. Holmes were mainly responsible for the creation of the bureau of mines.

He has been a champion of the right of workmen to organize in unions and by every fair means to compel recognition of such unions by employers.

He advocated and fought for the passage of the Esch bill to put an end to the disease called "phossy jaw" by taxing the phosphorous match industry out of existence.

He is one of the leaders in the United States for an honest protective tariff based on the findings of a non-partisan scientific commission.

When head of the Forestry Service he was responsible for initiating and putting into effect an insurance plan to protect the workers in his department.

He joined the fight for the passage of a workmen's compensation bill which was finally passed by the federal government for the benefit of the men employed by the national government.

He took part in the fight for pure food and helped frame the meat inspection law, which the beef trust opposed in vain.

As chief forester, he virtually created the United States Forest Service, through which the national forests are administered.

He was responsible for saving a hundred million acres of public forests to the people, while he held office, in spite of all the powerful corporations and individuals who tried to grab our natural resources could do.

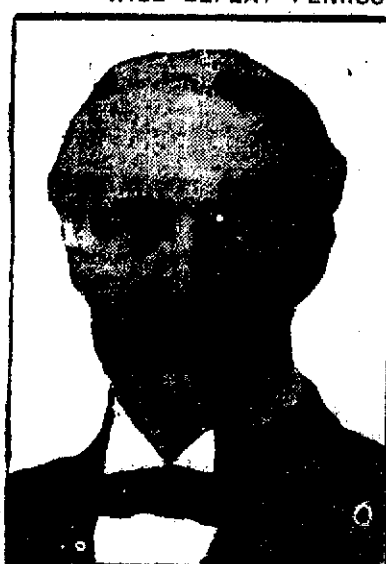

He uncovered the attempts of the magnates to monopolize our natural resources. He laid down a plan, now being followed, to preserve the people's rights and at the same time encourage business development and enterprise.

As head of the National Forest Service he gave a large share of his active interest to helping farmers in all states properly care for their wood lots.

Pinchot was the man behind the Act of June 11, 1905, which opened the national forests to settlement under the homestead law. Over one million acres of farms have been taken up under this act.

He has been an ardent and self-sacrificing worker for the forests and natural resources of Pennsylvania. He worked with J. T. Rothrock, the "father of forestry" in this state, to build up Pennsylvania's forests.

HERE IS THE MAN WHO WILL DEFEAT PENROSE

GIFFORD PINCHOT

Washington Party Candidate for U. S. Senator.

He was a member and secretary of the public lands Commission and bore the brunt of the work.

He is the man who started the fight to save the people's great deposits of coal, and other minerals, and made it an issue.

He checked the growing water power trust and saved millions of dollars for the public.

He is an expert at law making. For twenty years he has been active in shaping important and fundamental legislation in the interests of the people.

He is the man who is responsible for the defeat of the Baker Water Power grab bill, creating a vicious precedent for giving away public rights to water power companies.

He has appeared more often before House and Senate Committees, urging progressive conservation and humanitarian legislation, since his removal from the government service, in 1909, than any other private citizen in the country.

He prevented the passage of a dangerous bill introduced March 28, 1910, by Senator Smoot, which would have allowed the water power grabbers to help themselves to the remaining 12,000,000 horsepower of the public domain now in federal ownership.

He was responsible for the defeat of the vicious Hayburn amendment to the Agricultural bill in the sixty-fifth Congress, which would have ripped up the national forests for the benefit of the timber barons.

He was instrumental in defeating in the House of Representatives on February 23, 1911, the so-called Mondell Alaska Coal Leasing Bill, which would have turned over the coal lands to the grabbers who had been attempting to defraud the government and were caught.

Pinchot was responsible for defeating the nine Ballinger fake "conservation bills" aimed at breaking down federal control of public water powers, coal, oil, phosphates and natural gas, and thus making it easy for the grabbers to raid the public domain.

He formed the National Conservation Association to fight the men who would grab the natural wealth of the country. As president of that body he fought every effort made to take the people's resources without adequate compensation.

He was chairman of the National Conservation Commission and worked with the governors of the various states to safe-guard and develop the resources of their states.

He was a member of and the prime moving spirit in the Inland Waterways Commission to develop the waterways of the country and thus build up a great barrier against railroad domination.

He planned and put into effect a comprehensive system of grazing range control whereby on the government land, cattle and sheep men, whether rich or poor, get a square deal. He lived on the ranges with the stock men until he knew absolute-ly their needs.

He initiated and laid before President Roosevelt the plan to better the conditions of life on the farm. As the result of his work Roosevelt appointed the Country Life Commission August 10, 1908, and Pinchot became one of the leading members of it.

Pinchot suggested and worked for the plan of revising our land laws in order to make public lands more useful to the farmers.

He was a pioneer in the great government work of irrigation and one of the men to whom the people owe most for the great success of this project, which has brought millions of acres under cultivation.

"He played one of the leading parts in the effort to make the national government the chief instrument in developing the irrigation of the arid West," says Theodore Roosevelt in his autobiography.

Pinchot took a leading part in the scientific organization of the government bureaus at Washington. He put the business of his own department and that of others on a sound modern basis. Pinchot for years has been a leader in this movement to improve the condition of country churches.

He was the leading spirit and the director in the movement to conserve the resources of North America, which resulted in the international gathering at Washington, at which definite steps were taken to preserve the forests, the water power rights and mineral resources of Canada, United States and Mexico.

He founded and maintained at his own expense the Yale Forest School at his home at Milford, Pennsylvania, where field instruction was given to the students.

CENTRE COUNT MINISTERS ASK PALMER TO WITHDRAW

Association Representing All Denominations Urge Concentration of Anti-Penrose Strength on Gifford Pinchot

At a wide non-partisan meeting, held by the Ministerial Association of local option and social reformers, representing workers at Harrisburg recently, the sentiment that the Progressive nomination is the one candidate who can defeat Penrose and his system in Pennsylvania has spread all over the state. Additional evidence of the strong hold that the Pinchot candidacy has taken among voters who regard the defeat of Penrose as the important issue of the campaign comes from nine counties in the following manner:

all the Christian denominations of the county, that in view of the political situation, present and prospective, in the state of Pennsylvania, in order to effect the elimination of Boies Penrose and Penroseism, the wise and right thing for Mr. Palmer to do at this juncture is to withdraw from his candidacy for United States Senator in favor of Mr. Pinchot. The above resolution was unanimously adopted in session today. Secretary, MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION OF CENTRE COUNTY.

The Million Dollar Mystery

By HAROLD MAC GRATH

(Copyright, 1914, by Harold MacGrath)

"Pshaw! You have a bag full of tricks. You can easily manage to put him into an equivocal position out of which he cannot possibly squirm. As far as the girl is concerned, a little melodrama, arranged for the benefit of Florence. Fall into Norton's arms at the right moment, or something like that."

"I suppose I could. But if I failed, you're too damnably clever to fall in your own particular work. Some thing has got to be done to keep those two apart. I've often thought of raiding the house boldly and carrying off the whole family, Susan and all. But a wholesale affair like that would be too noisy. Think it over, Olga. We have gone too far to back down now. There's always Russia, and while I'm the boss over here they never cease to watch me. They'll make me an offer for a failure like this."

"She eyed him speculatively. 'You have money'."

"No, the money doesn't matter. It's the game. It's the game of playing with and loose with society of pilfering with it with one hand and making it how-tow with the other. It's the sport of the thing. What was your thought?"

"We could go away together, to South America."

"And tire of each other within a month," he retorted shrewdly. "No, we are in the same boat. We could not live but for this never ending excitement. And, more than that, we never could get far enough away from the long arm of the First Ten. We'll have to stick it out here. Can't you see?"

"Yes, I can see."

But in her heart she knew that she would have lived in a hut with this man till the end of her days. She abhorred the life, though she never, by the slightest word, let him become aware of it. There was always that abiding fear that at the first sign of weakness he would desert her. And she was wise in her deductions. Hargrave was loyal to her because she held his interest. Once that failed, he would be off and away.

The next afternoon the countess, having matured her plans against the happiness of the young girl who trusted her, drew up before the Hargrave place and alighted. Her welcome was the same as ever, and this strengthened her confidence.

The countess was always gesticulating. Her hands fluttered to emphasize her words. And the beautiful diamond solitaire caught the girl's eye. She seized the hand. Having an affair of her own, it was natural that she should be interested in that of her friend.

"I never saw that ring before."

"A gift of yesterday." The countess assumed a shy air which would have deceived St. Anthony. She twisted the ring on her finger.

"Tell me!" cried Florence. "You are engaged?"

"Mercy, no!"

"Is he rich?"

"No. Money should not matter when your heart is involved."

As this thought was in accord with her own, Florence nodded her head sagely.

"It is nothing serious. Just a fancy. I shall never marry again. Men are day deceivers, they always have been."

the patterns of the Persian rugs. Finally he nodded. "I see no reason why you should not go. Only, watch it."

Jones there is one thing that will make me brave and happy. Will you tell me if you are in direct communication with my father?"

"Yes, Miss Florence," he answered promptly. "But do not breathe this to a single soul, neither Susan nor Norton."

"I promise that. But, ah! hasten the day when he can come to me without fear."

"That is my wish also."

"You need not call me miss. Why should you?"

"It might not be wise to have any one hear me call you thus familiarly," he objected gravely.

"Please yourself about that. Now I must telephone Jim."

"Jim?" the butler murmured.

He caught the word which was not intended for his ears. But for once Jones had been startled out of himself.

"Is it wrong for me to call Mr. Norton Jim?" she asked with a bit of banter.

"It is not considered quite the proper thing, Miss Florence, to call a young man by his first name unless you are engaged to marry him, or grew up with him from childhood."

"Well, supposing I was engaged to him?"

"That would be a very grave affair. What have you to prove that he may not wish to marry you for your money?"

"Why, Jones, you know that I haven't a penny in the world. I can call my own! There is nothing to prove, except your word, that I am Stanley Hargrave's daughter."

"No, there is nothing to prove that you are his daughter. But hasn't it ever occurred to you that there might be a purpose back of this? Might it not be of inestimable value that your father's enemies should be let in doubt? Might it not be a means of holding them on the leash? There is proof, ample proof, my child; and when the time comes these will be shown you. But meantime put all thought of marrying Mr. Norton out of your mind."

"That I refuse to do," quietly. "I am at least mistress of my heart; and no one shall dictate to me whom I shall or shall not marry. I love Mr. Norton and he loves me, knowing that I may not be an heiress after all. And some day I shall marry him."

Jones bowed. This seemed to appear final to him, and nothing more was to be said.

Norton did not return to his rooms till seven. He found the telephone call and also a note in a handwriting unfamiliar. He tore off the envelope and found the contents to be from the Countess Perigoff.

"Call at eight tonight," he read. "I have an important news story for you. Tell me, as I cannot be involved in the case. Cordially, Olga, Countess Perigoff."

Humph! Norton twiddled the note in his fingers and at length rolled it into a ball and threw it into the waste basket. He, too, made a mistake. He should have kept that note. He dressed, dined, and hurried off to the apartments of the countess.

He arrived ten minutes before Florence and Susan.

And Jones did some rapid telephoning.

"How long, how long!" the butler murmured. How long would this strange combat last? The strain was terrible. He slept but little during the nights, for his ears were always waiting for sounds. He had cast the chest into the sea and it would take a dozen expert divers to locate it. And now, atop of all these worries the child must fall in love with the first comer! It was heart-breaking. Norton, so far as he had learned, was cool and brave, honest and reliable in a pinch, but as the husband of Stanley Hargrave's daughter, that was altogether a different matter. And he must devise some means of putting a stop to it, but—

But he was saved that trouble.

Mongoose and cobra, that was the game being played, the cunning of the one against the deadly venom of the other. If he forced matters he would only lay himself open to the strike of the snake. He must have patience. Gradually they were breaking the organization lopping off a branch here and there but the peace of the future depended upon getting a grip on the spine of the cobra himself.

The trick was simple. The countess had news trust her for that. She exhibited a cablegram dated at Gibraltar in which the British authorities stated definitely that no such person as William Orts, aviator had arrived at Gibraltar. And then as he rose she rose also and gently precipitated herself into his arms just at the moment Florence appeared in the doorway.

Very simple, indeed. When a woman falls toward a man there is nothing for him to do but extend his arms to prevent her from falling. Outwardly, however, to the eye which saw only the picture and comprehended not the cause, it had all the hallmarks of an affectionate embrace.

Florence stood perfectly still for a moment, then turned away.

"I beg your pardon," said the countess, "but a sudden fainting spell seized me. My heart is a bit weak."

"Don't mention it," replied the gallant Norton. He was as innocent as a babe as to what had really taken place.

Florence went back home. She wrote a brief note to Norton and inclosed the ring which she had secretly worn attached to a little chain around her neck.

When Norton came the next day she refused to see him. It was all over. She never wished to see him again.

"He says there has been some cruel mistake," said Jones.

"I saw him with the countess in his arms. I do not see any cruel mistake in that. I saw him. Tell him so. And add that I never wish to see him again."

Then she ran swiftly to her room, where she broke down and cried bitterly and would not be comforted by Susan.

"In heaven's name, what has happened?" demanded the frantic lover, "what has happened?"

The comedy of the whole affair lay in the fact that neither of the two suspected the countess, who consoled them both.

CHAPTER IX.

The Leap in the Dark.

So far as Jones was concerned he was rather pleased with the turn of affairs. This was no time for love-making; no time for silly, innocuous quarrels and bickerings, in which love must indulge or die. Florence no longer rode horseback, and Norton returned to his accustomed haunts, where no one made the slightest attempt upon his life. In his present state of mind he would have welcomed it.

"What's the matter with Jim?" asked the night city editor as he sang his eye shade.

"I don't know," answered the copy reader.

Goes around as if he had been eating dope. bumped into the boss a while ago and never stopped to apologize.

"Perhaps he's mapping out the front page for that Hargrave stuff," laughed the copy reader. Between you and me and the gate post I don't believe there ever was a war by the name of Hargrave."

"Oh, there was a chap by that name all right. His den. A man can swim 300 miles in rough water, he buoy or no. They ought to have funeral services, and let it go at that."

"But what was the reason for that fake cable from Gibraltar saying that Orts was alive?" I don't see any sense in that."

"The man who pulled it off did. I think for my part that both Orts and

PRESIDENT IN LETTER PRAISE GERARD

Hargrave are dead, and that the man picked up by the tramp steamer Oriol was riding some other balloon."

"You're wrong there. The description of it proved that it was Orts' machine. Oh, Jim probably has got a man's size yarn up his sleeve, but he's a long time in delivering the goods. He's beginning to mope a good deal. Woman back of it somewhere. Haven't held down this copy job for twelve years without being able to make some tolerable guesses. Jim's a star man. When he gets started nothing can stop him. He covered the Chinese Boxer rebellion better than any other correspondent there. I wonder how old he is?"

"O, I should say about thirty-one or two. Here he comes now. 'Lo Jim'."

"Hello. Where's Ford?" He gave me a ticket to the theater tonight, and I want to punch his head. What's drama coming to, anyhow? Cigarettes and booze and married couples. Can't they find good enough things out of doors? Oh, I know. They cater to a lot of fools who believe that what they see is an expression of high life in New York and London. And it's rot, plain rot. It's merely the scum on the boiling pot. And any old housewife would skim it off and chuck it into the slops. 'Life', 'Elle'!"

"What's the grouse?"

"Looking for the dramatic job?"

"No. I've just been wondering how far these theatrical managers can go without hitting the golden goose."

Norton sought his desk and began rummaging the drawers. He was not hunting for anything. He was merely passing away the time. By and by when the pasting no longer suited he pulled his chair over to the window and sat down, staring at stars such as Cepheus never dreamed of. Ships go on down to sea ferries swooping diagonally higher and higher the clockwork signs, but he took no note of these nor did he at.

"Not at home," he muttered.

He had called written telephoned. No use. The door remained shut. Jones answered the telephone and the letters came back. He began to think very deeply concerning the Perigoff woman. Had she played a trick? Had that fainting spell been bunkum for his benefit as well as Florence's? But he had not a shadow of a proof. The thing that puzzled him equally with this was that all attempts against his life had miraculously ceased. No safes thundered down in front of him, and no autos tried to care him in two.

The only thing that kept him active was the daily call of Jones by wire. Miss Florence was well, that was all. Jones was permitted to say.

Restlessly Norton spurned his chair and walked over to the telephone booth. It was midnight. He might or might not be able to get Jones. But almost instantly a voice said, "What is it?"

"Jones?"

"Yes. Who is it?"

"Norton."

READY! AIM! FIRE!

Millions of men on the European battlefield are today mechanically obeying this command. May we call you to "Attention" to thoughtfully consider the same words in the form of a reminder rather than a command.

We are now READY with our fall line of Heating Stoves in both single and double heaters and in the selection of same it has been our AIM to select the one essential thing in a heating stove and that is its Heat Radiating Qualities rather than useless supposed advantages that add expense for mere show. A stove to stand FIRE and radiate heat must have the firebox and combustion space constructed in correct proportion, of good material by general good workmanship. In seeking this we have not lost sight of the fact that beautiful and symmetrical lines may be combined with these qualifications and have selected accordingly. It will give us pleasure to give you the pass word and show you through "our line." We have no fortifications at the door, no Aircraft, no Submarines. YOU ARE WELCOME.

IMPORTANT DATES.

General election, November 3.
Hettie Jane Dunaway, reader and impersonator, at Woman's club, Nov. 25.
Thanksgiving day, Thursday, November 26.
Christmas, Friday, December 25.
October 22, 1914

Good evening! Remember, one ounce of action is worth a ton of talk when it comes to doing things for Clearfield.

A vote for Palmer is a vote for Penrose.

A vote for Moulthrop is a vote in favor of good government.

The election will be held on November third; be sure you vote right.

Will we go to war with Great Britain over a tank ship belonging to the Standard Oil company?

Brumbaugh on a local option platform of his own making is a horrible example of a schoolmaster abroad.

The Kaiser should have remembered that horns sting and that no wise man ever stirs up a hornet's nest.

Some women imagine it is the hat that is being trimmed, but the old man knows that he is the one that is being trimmed.

Hunting accident reports are coming in, but fortunately none of these accidents has occurred in Clearfield county up to this time.

These be Democrats days sure enough, and yet Palmer wants to go to the United States senate to help make conditions worse.

The American people are almost willing to believe that there is no difference between the soldiers of the European nations charged with atrocities.

Tomorrow has been named as a fall arbor day, and school children are not only urged to plant trees, but to protect them after they have been planted.

Englishmen in America do not want to go back home and fight for their country, and many of those who are at home would be glad if they could get away from going to war.

With a war tax of one dollar and seventy-five cents a barrel on beer, the brewers will soon be asking the public to "buy a keg" to help them out of their financial difficulties.

Clearfield county would be ably represented in the state legislature if Woodland, Lippert and Boone were to be elected to the assembly, and that is why these candidates will be elected.

Christmas is coming on, and it begins to look as if the Kaiser would not eat his Christmas dinner in Paris or that the czar would partake of roast turkey in Berlin. The joke is on somebody.

Will the burres issue a proclamation warning boys and young men to keep within the law in their celebration of All Hallowe'en? The citizens are entitled to have their property rights respected.

A quite noticeable improvement in the running of automobiles and motorcycles in this town has resulted from the passage of the ordinance regulating mufflers on these machines. It is creditable to the motorists that thus far none of them has been arrested for violating the ordinance.

Colonel Roosevelt has disappointed many people by cutting out of his itinerary in this state his contemplated trip to Clearfield county, but the Colonel is needed in New York more than he is in Pennsylvania, where there are a sufficient number of good citizens to bring about the ousting of Penroseism from the political map of the state.

MORE ISLANDS SEIZED

Japan has taken over a number of islands in the Marshall, Ladrone and other Pacific ground, "for military purposes only." The seizing of islands in the Pacific ocean seems to be a habit with the Japanese, and it is hoped that the Nippon government is telling the truth when it declares it has no intention of retaining these islands. None of these islands belong to the United States, but they are close enough to American territorial possessions to make their occupancy, even temporarily, unpleasant to this government.

Thus far in the European war Japan has not distinguished herself in her encounters with the Germans. While there cannot be a considerable number of the Kaiser's subjects in Taing Tau the Japanese have not made much impression upon the forts of that province. Being within striking distance of the foe it would seem as if the Japanese ought to have ousted the Germans in short order. It looks, under the circumstances, very much as if Japan is making her attack upon the Germans in China a mere subterfuge to hide her real intention of extending the sphere of her activities until she has gained a position from which she may demand part of the spoils after the war is over.

PRESIDENT PRAISES PALMER.

President Wilson has given A. Mitchell Palmer a clean bill of health and advises the Democrats of Pennsylvania to elect him to the United States senate. If any candidate in this state stands in need of a recommendation that candidate is Palmer. But President Wilson's laudation of the Democratic bo. will not have any effect upon the coming election. The people of Pennsylvania are just now feeling the direct effects of the tariff legislation by congress, and they are not in a humor to support at the polls a man who helped forward the passage of that law.

Pennsylvania voters still cling to the idea that the Democrats are not mentally or morally equipped to legislate for the best interests of the country. The finishing touches are being put to the war tax bill, a measure which the Democrats find necessary in order that the heavy deficit in treasury receipts caused by the operation of the Democratic tariff may be made good. When they realize that they must pay this tax because of Democratic blundering and incompetency the voters of Pennsylvania will turn from Palmer and support Gifford Pinchot, who advocates placing the tariff in the hands of a commission which would regulate the tariff in accordance with the rules of good sense not at the dictation of any political party.

A Prayer for U. S.
God bless the old United States,
God keep her people strong;
God guard the peace within her gates
And fill her land with song.
Teach us who dwell beneath her flag
To cherish peaceful ways;
To cease of cannon's strength to brag
And uniforms to praise.

God bless the old United States,
Where freedom's banner flies,
Where joyously the mother waits
With bright and smiling eyes,
The father, coming home at night,
His day of toiling done,
And where to meet him with delight
His happy children run.

Here all the tears are honest tears,
And pain is honest pain,
And here, secure throughout the years,

The toilers' homes remain.
Here firesides are not desolate
By needless shot and shell,
But honor and reward await,
The men who labor well.

God bless the old United States,
God bless her people, too;
God keep forever at her gates
The old red, white and blue,
And may its beauties never die,
But every year increase;
God grant that flag shall ever fly

Pinchot Popular With The Anti-Rum People

"Is that the man who's going to put rum out of the state? I want to see him."

A woman pushed through the crowd that gathered around the country store at Sykesville Jefferson county, last Friday, when Gifford Pinchot, the Washington party candidate who is out to defeat Boise Penrose for the United States senate, stopped on his campaign tour of the county, says the Philadelphia North American.

The woman was near middle age and haggard. A child was clinging to her hand. She looked as if she had walked some distance, perhaps from the desolate coke settlement that edges the town with a border of blackened landscape. She was as grim and gaunt as the devastated land that surrounds the suffocating furnaces.

She looked long and earnestly at the man who stood with bared head on the porch of the grocery store. She edged near so she could hear what he had to say. Her eyes searched his face as if she would wring a promise from it. She listened with devouring ears to his words. Apparently she understood, apparently she was satisfied, for she turned away with a glimmer of light in her eyes.

"I hope he wins," she said, and then she gathered her shawl about her. She walked slowly toward the edge of the town where the tiered crosses of the Polish cemetery gleamed in the sunshine.

A group of boys scuffled about the automobile in which the Washington party candidates had arrived. Suddenly one of them shouted to the others:

"That's the man that's going to lick Penrose. If he gets elected we won't have any more saloons. That's what the evangelist told us. Let's look at him."

They scurried over to the edge of the crowd and for ten minutes they listened to what Gifford Pinchot had to say.

It is doubtful if anybody who started out to find Sykesville would know how to get there. But it is on the map, and, tiny as it is and remote from the big centers of things, it is one of the most aroused settlements of Pennsylvania.

Perhaps there are not 100 houses within range of the general store. The men, who are chiefly foreigners, work in the mines and the coke furnaces, and a few of them own farms. The women do what women always do in such settlements; they stay home and try to feed the men and the children.

An Appeal to the People of Pennsylvania.

It is in the interest of the public—whose chief concern is good service and safety—that the Extra Crew Law now on the Statute books of Pennsylvania and other States be repealed. This law causes a waste of $1,000,000 annually in the employment of unnecessary men on the Pennsylvania System alone. No one is more concerned than the Pennsylvania Railroad Company in securing maximum safety on its lines. Every train on this railroad has a full crew, and this extra expenditure adds nothing to safety or public convenience. The same money had much better be spent to remove grade crossings, improve tracks, signals, and bridges, and buy steel cars. This extra crew law, which compels unnecessary expenditures, is one of the factors which menaces the ability of this Company to pay present rates of wages to that great body of employees whose activities are needed.

The Public Service Commission should see to it that all trains are properly manned. Such action would amply protect employees and the public. We appeal to the people in their own interest, we appeal to our employees in their best interest, to ask their representatives in the next Pennsylvania Legislature to repeal the Extra Crew Law.

The Last Shot

By
FREDERICK PALMER

Westerling and his aide and valet, acquiring their way as strangers, found the new staff headquarters of the Grays established in an army building, where Bouchard had been assigned to his duties, back of the Gray range. As their former chief entered a room, in the disorder of maps and packing-passes, the staff-officers rose from their work to stand at salute like stone images, in respect to a field-marshal's rank. There was no word of greeting but a telling silence before Turcas spoke. His voice had lost its parchment crackle and become natural. The blue veins on his bulging temples were a little more pronounced, his thin features a little more plucked, but otherwise he was unchanged and he seemed equal to another strain as heavy as the one he had undergone.

"I've Come for Westerling."

"We have a new government, a new premier," he said. "The old premier was killed by a shot from a crowd that he was addressing from the balcony of the palace. After this, the capital became quieter. As we get in touch with the divisions, we find the army in better shape than we had feared it would be. There is a recovery of spirit, owing to our being on our own soil."

"Yes," replied Westerling, drowning in the stares and grasping at a straw. "Only a panic, as I said. If—" his voice rising hoarsely and catching in his throat.

"We have a new government, a new premier!" Turcas repeated, with firm, methodical politeness. Westerling looking from one face to another with shiny eyes, lowered them before Bouchard. "There's a room ready for your Excellency upstairs," Turcas continued. "The orderly will show you the way."

Now Westerling grasped the fact that he was no longer chief of staff. He drew himself up in a desperate attempt at dignity; the staff saluted again, and, uncertainly, he followed the orderly, with the aide and valet still in loyal attendance.

Two figures were in the doorway: a heavy-set market woman with a fringe of down on her lip and a cadaverously thin man, who might have been a superannuated schoolmaster, with a bronze cross won in the war of forty years ago on his breast and his eyes burning with the youthful fire of Grandfather Fragnin's.

"They got the premier in the capital. We've come for Westerling! We want to know what he did with our sons! We want to know why he was beaten!" cried the market woman.

"Yes," said the veteran. "We want him to explain his lies. Why did he keep the truth from us? We were ready to fight, but not to be treated like babies. This is the twentieth century!"

"We want Westerling! Tell Westerling to come out!" rose impatient shouts behind the two figures in the doorway.

"You are sure that he has one?" whispered Turcas to Westerling's aide. "Yes," was the choking answer—"yes. It is better than that—with a glance toward the mob. 'I left my own on the table.'"

"We can't save him! We shall have to let them—" Turcas's voice was drowned by a great roar of cries, with no word except "Westerling!" distinguishable, that pierced every crack of the house. A wave of movement starting from the rear drove the veteran and the market woman and a dozen others through the doorway toward the stairs. Then the sound of a shot was heard overhead.

"The man you seek is dead!" said Turcas, stepping in front of the crowd, his features unrelenting in authority. "Now, go back to your work and leave us to ours."

"I understand, sir," said the veteran. "We've no argument with you."

After Lanstron's announcement to the Brown staff of his decision not to cross the frontier, there was a restless movement in the chairs around the table, and the grimaces on most of the faces were those with which a practical man regards a Utopian proposal. The vice-chief was drumming on the table edge and looking steadily at a point in front of his fingers. If Lanstron resigned he became chief.

"Partow might have this dream before he won, but would he now?" asked the vice-chief. "No. He would go on!"

"Yes," said another officer. "The world will ridicule the suggestion; our people will overwhelm us with their anger. The Grays will take it for a sign of weakness."

"Not if we put the situation rightly to them," answered Lanstron. "Not if we go to them as brave adversary to brave adversary, in a fair spirit."

"We can—we shall take the range!" the vice-chief went on in a burst of rigid conviction when he saw that opinion was with him. "Nothing can stop this army now!" He struck the table edge with his fist, his shoulders stiffening.

"Please—please, don't!" implored Marta softly. "It sounds so like Westerling!"

The vice-chief started as if he had received a sharp pin-prick. His shoulders unconsciously relaxed. He began a fresh study of a certain point on the table top. Lanstron, looking first at one and then at another, spoke again; his words as measured as they ever had been in military discussion and eloquent. He began outlining his own message which would go with Partow's to the premier, to the nation, to every regiment of the Browns, to the Grays, to the world. He set forth why the Browns, after tasting the courage of the Grays, should realize that they could not take their range. Partow had not taught him to put himself in other men's places in vain. The boy who had kept up his friendship with engine drivers after he was an officer knew how to sink the plummet into human emotions. He reminded the Brown soldiers that there had been a providential answer to the call of "God with us!" he reminded the people of the lives that would be lost to no end but to engender hatred; he begged the army and the people not to break faith with that principle of "Not for theirs, but for ours," which had been their strength.

"I should like you all to sign it—to make it simply the old form of the staff has the honor to report," he said finally.

There was a hush as he finished—the hush of a deep impression when one man waits for another to speak. All were looking at him except the vice-chief, who was still staring at the table as if he had heard nothing. Yet every word was etched on his mind. The man whose name was the symbol of victory to the soldiers, who would be more than ever a hero as the news of his charge with the African Braves traveled along the lines, would go on record to his soldiers as saying that they could not take the Gray range. This was a handicap that the vice-chief did not care to accept; and he knew how to turn a phrase as well as to make a soldierly decision. He looked up smilingly to Marta.

"I have decided that I had rather not be a Westerling, Miss Galland," he said. "We'll make it unanimous. And you," he burst out to Lanstron—"you legatee of old Partow; I've always said that he was the biggest man of our time. He has proved it by catching the spirit of our time and incarnating it."

Vaguely, in the whirl of her joy, Marta heard the chorus of assent as the officers sprang to their feet in the elation of being at one with their chief again. Lanstron caught her arm, fearing that she was going to fall, but a burning question rose in her mind to steady her.

"Then my shame—my sending men to slaughter—my sacrifice was not in vain?" she exclaimed.

"The sea of people packed in the great square of the Brown capital made a roar like the thunder of waves against a breakwater at sight of a white spot on a background of gray stone, which was the head of an eminent statesman."

"It looks as if our government would last the week out," the premier chuckled as he turned to his colleagues at the cabinet table.

As yet only the brief bulletins whose publication in the newspapers had aroused the public to a frenzy had been received. The cabinet, as eager for details as the press, had remained up, awaiting a fuller official account.

"We have a long communication in preparation," the staff had telegraphed. "Meanwhile, the following is submitted."

"Good heavens! It's not from the army! It's from the grave!" exclaimed the premier as he read the first paragraphs of Partow's message. "Of all the concealed dynamite ever!" he gasped as he grasped the full meaning of the document, that piece of news, as staggering as the victory itself, that had lain in the staff vaults for years. "Well, we needn't give it out to the press; at least, not until after mature consideration," he declared when they had reached the end of Partow's appeal. "Now we'll hear what the staff has to say for itself after gratifying the wish of a dead man," he added as a messenger gave him another sheet.

"The staff, in loyalty to its dead leader who made victory possible, and in loyalty to the principles of defense for which the army fought, begs to say to the nation—"

It was four o'clock in the morning when this dispatch concluded with "We heartily agree with the foregoing," and the cabinet read the names of all the general staff and the corps and division commanders. Coursing crowds in the streets were still shouting hoarsely and sometimes drunkenly: "On to the Gray capital! Nothing can stop us now!" The premier tried to imagine what a sea of faces in the great square would look like in a rage. He was born in the prople in a passion for retribution and a headless army that was supposed to charge across the frontier at dawn.

"The thing is sheer madness!" he cried. "It's insubordination! I'll have it suppressed! The army must go on to gratify public demand. I'll show the staff that they are not in the saddle. They'll obey orders!"

He tried to get Lanstron on the long distance.

"Sorry, but the chief has retired," answered the officer on duty sleepily. "In fact, all the rest of the staff have, with orders that they are not to be disturbed before ten."

"Tell them that the premier, the head of the government, their commander, is speaking!"

"Yes, sir. The orders not to disturb them are quite positive, and as a junior I could not do so except by their orders as superiors. The chief, before retiring, however, repeated to me, in case any inquiry came from you, sir, that there was nothing he could add to the staff's message to the nation and the army. It is to be given to the soldiers the first thing in the morning, and he will let you know how they regard it."

"Confound these machine minds that spring their surprises as fully executed plans!" exclaimed the premier.

"It's true—Partow and the staff have covered everything—met every argument. There is nothing more for them to say," said the foreign minister.

"But what about the indemnity?" demanded the finance minister. He was thinking of victory in the form of piles of gold in the treasury.

This question, too, was answered. "War has never brought prosperity," Partow had written. "Its purpose is to destroy, and destruction can never be construction. The conclusion of a war has often assured a period of peace; and peace gave the impetus of prosperity attributed to war. A man is strong in what he achieves, not through the gifts he receives or the goods he steals. Indemnity will not raise another blade of wheat in our land. To take it from a beaten man will foster in him the desire to beat his adversary in turn and recover the amount and more. Then we shall have the apprehension of war always in the air, and soon another war and more destruction. Remove the danger of a European cataclysm, and any sum extorted from the Grays becomes paltry beside the wealth that peace will create. An indemnity makes the purpose of the courage of the Grays in their assaults and of the Browns in their resistance that of the burglar and the looter. There is no money value to a human life when it is your own; and our soldiers gave their lives. Do not cheapen their service."

"Considering the part that we played at The Hague," observed the foreign minister, "it would be rather inconsistent for us not to—"

"There is only one thing to do. Lanstron has got us!" replied the premier.

The premier of the Browns found himself talking over the long distance to the premier of the Grays in as neighborly a fashion as if they had adjoining estates and were arranging a matter of community interest.

"You have been so fine in waiving an indemnity," said the premier of the Grays, "that Turcas suggests we pay for all the damage done to property on your side by our invasion. I'm sure our people will rise to the suggestion. Their mood has overwhelmed every preconceived notion of mine. In place of the old suspicion that a Brown could do nothing except with a selfish motive is the desire to be as fair as the Browns. And the practical way the people look at it makes me think that it will be enduring."

"I think so, for the same reason," responded the premier of the Browns. "They say it is good business. It means prosperity and progress for both countries."

"After all, a soldier comes out of the hero of the great peace movement," concluded the premier of the Grays. "A soldier took the tricks with our own cards. Old Partow was the greatest statesman of us all."

"No doubt of that!" agreed the premier of the Browns. "It's a senti-

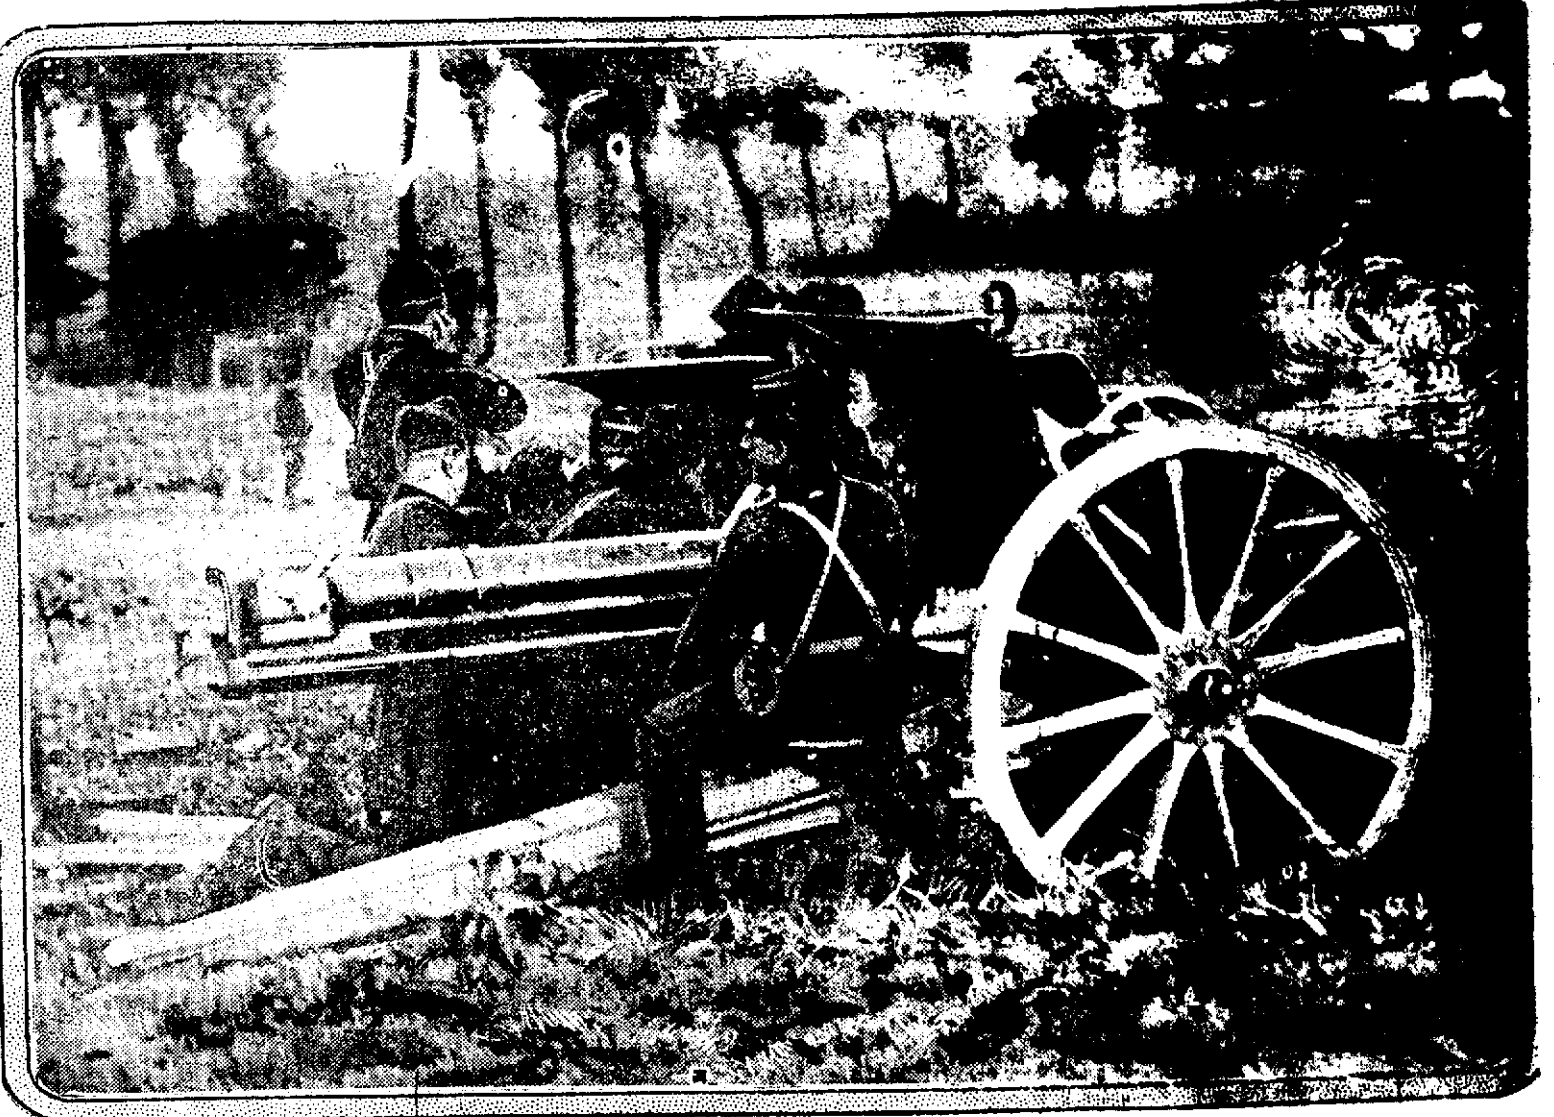

"Good Heavens! It's Not From the Army. It's From the Grave!"

"We must jump in at the head of the procession and receive the mud or the bouquets as it happens."

With Partow's and the staff's appeals went an equally earnest one from the premier and his cabinet. Naturally, the noisy element of the cities was the first to find words. It shouted in rising anger that Lanstron had betrayed the nation. Army officers whom Partow had retired for leisurely habits said that he and Lanstron had struck at their own calling. But the average man and woman, in a haze from the shock of the appeals after a night's celebration, were reading and wondering and asking their neighbors' opinions. If not in Partow's then in the staff's message they found the mirror that set their own critical professions staring at them.

Before they had made up their minds the correspondents at the front had set the wires singing to the evening editions; for Lanstron had directed that they be given the run of the army's lines at daybreak. They told of soldiers awakening after the debauch of yesterday's fighting, normal and rested, glowing with the security of possession of the frontier and responding to their leaders' sentiment; of officers of the type favored by Partow who would bring the industry that commanded respect to any calling, taking Lanstron's views as worthy of their profession; of that irrepressible poet laureate of the soldiers, Captain Stransky, I. C. (iron cross), breaking forth in a new song to an old tune, expressing his brotherhood ideas in a "We have—ours—let—them—keep—their—chords—that—was—spreading—from—regiment—to—regiment."

This left the retired officers to grumble in their corners that war was no longer a gentleman's vocation, and so showed the progress of their natural at-

Women and Babies Their Prey.

In a series of six cartoons the Hennepin Brewing Company of Moorhead, Minnesota, pictures the gradual evolution of a healthy woman into a healthy and beautiful society belle under the magic treatment of "Hennepin Beer".

The first and most significant picture of the series shows a family cable. The father has a glass of beer in his hand; mother a glass of beer in her hand; the little boy, aged about six, has a glass of beer in his hand.

The Hennepin people are not the only brewers who outrage public sentiment by such indecencies. Pabst makes a specialty of this, and all the leading breweries are doing their utmost to cultivate the taste for beer in women and babies.

It is nothing to them that beer breaks down the finer feminine instincts. They care nothing that beer has probably introduced more women called the wisdom of mothers. "Lanny lives and lives for you. Your destiny is life and to make the most of life, as you always have. Isn't it, Marta?"

"Yes," she breathed after a pause, in conviction, as she pressed her mother's hands. "Yes, you have a gift of making things simple and clear."

Then she looked up to Lanstron and the flame in her eyes, whose leaping, spontaneous passion he already knew, held something of the eternal, as her arms crept around his neck.

"You are life, Lanny! You are the destiny of today and tomorrow!" (THE END.)

to disreputable practices than any other one agency. It is of slight consequence to them that the police brutalizes courtesans and corrupts. It means nothing to them that the children that have not yet come are blighted, stunted, diseased, mangled and predestined to failure because of the drinking habits so earnestly encouraged among the mothers of the day.

It is all a matter of dividends to the brewers.

The monument to George Washington in the Capital City is 550 feet high. If the dollars spent for alcoholic drinks were erected into a monument one foot square, it would make a memorial to John Barleycorn 67 miles high, 470 times the height of Washington's monument.

There are 166,351,886 gallons of whiskey gloomily reposing in Kentucky warehouses, waiting to be the part of men who now live in prohibition territory and have ceased to paint their noses.

We have learned that some unmitigated degenerate is making wine out of scuppermons. This fellow should be sentenced to life imprisonment. The next thing they will be rotting the muscadines. The proper use of scuppermons and muscadines can be clearly set forth by any bare-footed boy.

The Inter-county No-License Federation of Pennsylvania will carry its fight into half the counties of that state this winter. No-license campaigns last year eliminated 229 saloons in 29 counties.

"RABBITT" MARANVILLE WAS A TINNER'S APPRENTICE

By Frank G. Menke.

(Special to The Progress)
New York, October 21.—Walter

Maranville, the greatest shortstop in the game, broke into football against his father's wishes. Pere Maranville thought that "Rabbit" would make a mighty good tinner, but as a ball player—bah!

Several years ago the "Rabbit" played amateur baseball in odd moments and his work attracted the attention of the New Bedford, Mass. team. "Rabbit" got an offer from the New Bedford team and went to his dad about it.

"Turn it down," said Papa Maranville to "Rabbit," who just then was learning the tinner's trade. "In a few years you'll develop into a good tinner and you'll make good wages—at least $25 a week. As a ball player you'll never make good. You're too small."

"Rabbit," however, had ambitions to become a ball player. He thought he could make good even if his father didn't. He disregarded the advice of his dad and signed up with New Bedford.

"You'll be sorry—hands off it," said his father when he heard what "Rabbit" had done. "You'll never make good. They'll fire you in a mighty short order. And you'll get so used to loafing that you won't want to work at your tinning job again. Instead of having a son that I can be proud of, a son who works hard at a regular trade, I'll have a son who won't be working at anything."

Was Papa right—or, was Papa wrong?

Incidentally, it might be stated that Maranville, in his two years with New Bedford and three years with the Braves, has earned about 20 times as much money as he would have earned in the tinning trade, and that during the next five years, unless an accident wrecks his future, he will earn more money than he would have earned in 40 years as a tinner.

Ed Knoetche former star first baseman of the St. Louis Cardinals, who proved to be a big disappointment last season when he guarded the "front door" for the Pittsburgh Pirates. Knoetche, ordinarily a hard hitter, fell way below his form last season. The fact that he reported to have jumped to the Federal league has not caused the Pittsburgh fans to shed any tears.

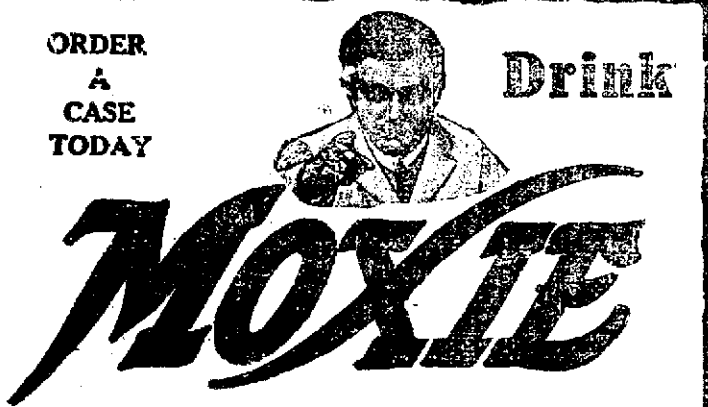

SCHMIDT REAL HERO OF SERIES S, SAYS MACK

Charley Schmidt in his post mortem on the recent world's series, Connie Mack, manager of the hunched Philadelphia Athletics, said: "I think that Schmidt, the Braves' husky first sacker, was one of the real heroes of the series. The plays he made in the opening inning of the first game at Shibe Park had a greater effect on the Braves and my own players than any others."

The hunting season has now been open a week and judging from the prolific shooting one would think there was game behind every stump, but we do not see it in the possession of the mighty Ninrods as they return from the chase. We want to enter a protest against the reckless shooting that is characteristic of many of these hunters. Yesterday we heard the report of a gun and looking in the direction indicated saw the smoke rise about 50 or 60 rods from us, and at the same time heard the shot rattle through the boughs of a small chestnut right over our head and only 8 or 10 feet above us.

WAR MAPS FOR PROGRESS READERS

Valuable Aids to Understanding
of European Situation

A HANDSOME PIECE OF WORK

With These Maps the Public Can Tell at a Glance the Location of the Cities and Towns Where the Fighting Nations are Struggling for Supremacy—How Maps May be Purchased.

In keeping with its determination to give the readers of the Progress the latest and best news of the great European war, the management of this paper has decided to distribute to the public at a nominal cost to the people an official map of the territory in which the big armies of the warring powers are fighting. With the aid of this map the citizen can trace accurately the movements of the armies and discover the scenes of battles as reported day by day in the news columns of the Progress.

This map is large, is printed in five colors, with the names and locations of the towns and cities, mountains, rivers and other data necessary to a complete understanding of the situation in the war zone. The map was originally made in Europe by the war process, at once expensive and complete, and has been reproduced in this country on a copier. The type is clear and the plan is sought by the man who is at all information regarding the war are plainly marked. On the back of this map is to be found the latest and most authentic information regarding the nations now engaged in the conflict.

The Progress has been able to procure a number of these maps for distribution to those who wish to have an intelligent conception of the great events which are happening in Europe. To secure one of these maps the reader will cut the coupon from another page of this paper and present it, with ten cents, at the counter of the business office of the Progress and one of the maps will be handed to him. As the number of copies of the map which the Progress was able to get is limited it will be well for those who wish copies to call early.

The maps will be sent by mail either in town or out of town for 15 cents in coin, stamps or money order.

They are really the most valuable maps of Europe that are in existence, and will prove a source of profit to those who wish to learn more than they know of the countries across the sea. If you wish to keep posted on the movements of the immense armies in the greatest conflict the world has ever known, get one of these maps at once.

BE PRETTY! TURN GRAY HAIR DARK

Try Grandmother's old Favorite Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Almost everybody knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray; also ends dandruff, itching scalp and stops falling hair. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is messy and troublesome. Nowadays by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe for about 50 cents.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy.

MORE RETRENCHMENT BY THE PENNSY RAILROAD

A gang of men were busy in the Pennsylvania station at Pittsburgh Sunday morning jerking out the swinging desk telephones in the offices of the station and substituting therefor the ordinary desk sets. A large number of the swinging variety were removed as most of the office desks were equipped with them.

The reason for the change is that three is 50 cents a year saved in having the ordinary telephone and the change is part of the Pennsylvania's economy program. The advantage of the instrument that were removed was that they could be swung from one side of a wide desk to another.

Warning on Explosives

On the Pittsburgh division of the Pennsylvania lines west, conductors of trains that pick up cars labeled "Inflammable" or "explosive," whether empty or loaded, must make known the fact to every member of the train crew, including the engineer and fireman. At terminals the yardmaster must give such notice on a prescribed form.

Signal System Extended

The automatic electric block signal system of the Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburgh railway was placed in service between Buffalo, N. Y., and Salamanca, N. Y., this week. This stretch of 63 miles brings the total of miles covered by the system up to 215 miles of road so protected, and the system is being extended to cover the entire road.

The work was recently begun after the completion of installing telephone for train dispatching, the two added safeguards being the latest factors in modern railroad operation.

Railway Notes

The Pennsylvania railroad spends $55,000 a day for coal. This aggregates $20,075,000 a year.

Railroad equipment men say that not since the panic of 1901 has such complete stagnation of the equipment markets been witnessed.

There is no foundation for reports that the Pennsylvania Railroad company will acquire the Buffalo & Susquehanna Railway company. The United States Steel corporation has recently taken the following orders for rails: Minneapolis & St. Louis, 1,500 tons; Toledo, On Western Railway of Alabama, 1,100 tons.

Recent orders received by the Baldwin locomotive works include one switcher for the Hoboken Manufacturing railroad, and one Mogul type for the Cuban-American Sugar company of New York.

Pennsylvania steel has received an order for 550 tons of steel from the Southern Railway for a viaduct over the Tye river, Georgia.

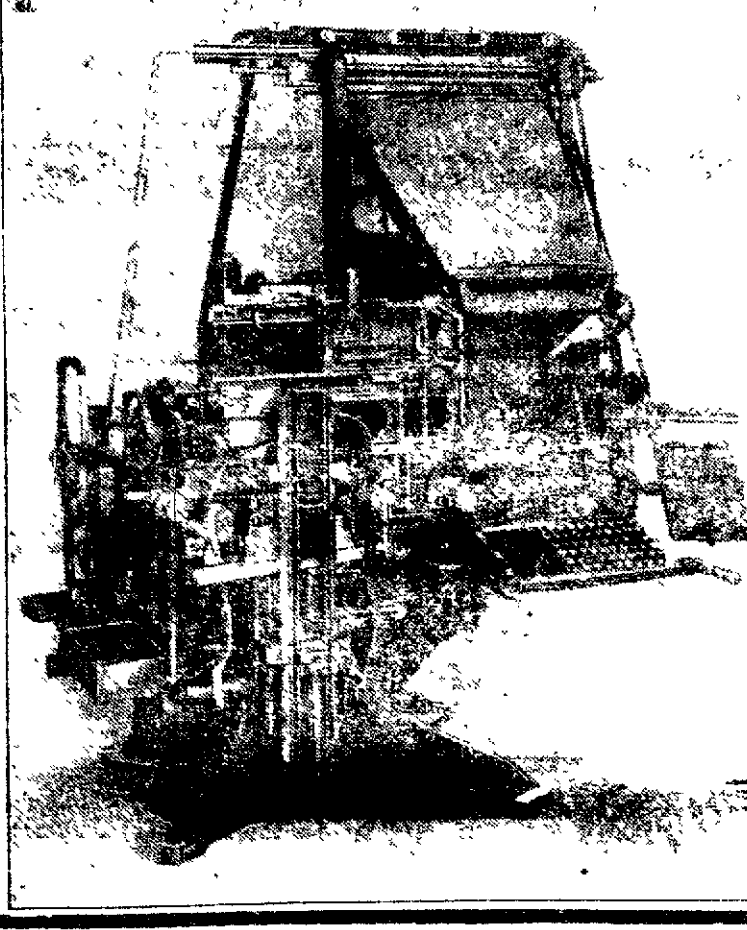

Since August 1 seventy-four companies have either passed, reduced or deferred dividends. In the group are railroad companies.

Star Witness in Murder Trial
The mother was taken to the county jail and the child given to her. She was the star witness in the Paul Caro and Ralph Mastriano murder trial in this county last May, and the murdered man was the father of the child. Lena's parents live in the east end, and she has lived with them until recently.

Escorted by Four Officers.
Some little amusement was afforded spectators when the baby arrived at the county jail last evening. The baby is six weeks old and none too robust, neither did there seem to be anything about the child which would lead anybody to believe that it was a desperado in disguise. And yet the infant was escorted to the prison by four officers of the law, two policemen and two constables.

Nothing occurred on the way from the station to the jail to show that the baby was inclined to be vicious, but the four stalwart men breathed a sigh of relief when the prison cell closed behind the infant.

It is reported that Sheriff McCloskey was compelled to act as nurse for the baby during the night, walking the floor with it and administering soothing syrup, as the child was fretful, whether from colic or the fright it had received when it was arrested by four big men deponent further sayeth not.

LOVE AND ROMANCE IN PICTURES AT THE GLOBE

"The Barrier of Ignorance." Emerson, a young physician, loves a Nancy, an ignorant mountain girl. Mrs. Marshall, his sister, urges Nancy to break her engagement to him, saying that she will ruin his career. This she does. After a time Nancy marries a mountaineer. When her daughter is old enough to go to school she decides to send her to Emerson, reminding him of the past and asking him to educate her. The husband objects, and when he learns what she has done shoots his wife. In the end the now eminent physician performs an operation which saves Nancy's life and her husband forgives him. At the Globe tonight.

"Smiles of Fortune," an amusing story of a gruff old uncle who commands his nephew, who is as solemn as an owl, to present a smiling face when he comes to see him. The nephew can't smile, so he goes to a beauty specialist, who manufactures a smile. At the Globe tonight.

"Tobacco Industry" is a film showing how tobacco is grown and prepared for the market. At the Globe tonight.

The father is arrested, but Mrs. Vaughn has him freed. At the Globe tonight.

"HE NEVER SAID A WORD" AT OPERA HOUSE TONIGHT

"The Line Rider." The young line rider was fearless, both in loving and fighting. He ran a desperate chance when he went after the cattle thieves, but his reward was unexpected and great. It is a gripping drama of the cattle range and as played by the Eclair company the picture with its picturesque setting is wonderfully interesting. At the opera house tonight.

"He Never Said a Word." Robert Deering comes to visit his uncle, who is an attending physician at a deaf and dumb school, on the evening of the weekly entertainment. The uncle instructs him how to talk by signs to the inmates. He manages to pass the evening, which is rather dull, until he meets a very pretty girl, whom he supposes to be a "dummy" also and she in turn thinks that he cannot talk, but at last explanations are made. At the opera house tonight.

"Cuckooville Goes Skating." Is an amusing comedy at the opera house this evening.

Nation-Wide Cotton Goods Week at Leonardson's, Beginning Thursday, October 22, Ending Thursday, October 29

Join the National Cotton Goods Buying Movement; Buy cotton goods during this week at attractive prices and help the South find a market for her surplus cotton. Remember every purchase helps. We are going to sacrifice profits and ask you to help by buying at least a dollar's worth of cotton goods or fabrics during this event.

We must remember each section of our country is dependent upon the other for its prosperity. On account of the war there is a surplus of cotton within our borders, and you can help to give work to thousands upon thousands of American workers if you purchase an extra dollar's worth of goods made of cotton during our Nation-wide cotton goods week. Help your neighbors in the south find a market for their cotton crop at home. We are doing our part by offering staple cotton fabrics at wholesale prices.
